Roosevelt Hints CCC Might Cure Draft Rejects

President Alarmed By Number Who Fail To Pass Physical Tests for the Army

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

Pointing to an alarmingly large percentage of selectees rejected because of physical disabilities, President Roosevelt yesterday hinted at the possibility of a large scale reconditioning program to be undertaken by the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Authoritative sources at the CCC, however, indicated that such a policy probably could not be carried out on a voluntary basis, and that legislation would be required to permit the assignment of physically under-par selectees to the CCC for a "rehabilitation period."

The President's comment on the high proportion of Army rejects followed an announcement that he was worried by what he called amazing and disturbing figures on the health of the American people. These data, he said, stemmed from a survey the results of which he hoped to make public Tuesday.

An indication of the seriousness of the problem was given last Thursday by Col. L. G. Rountree, of the Army Medical Corps. Speaking before the scientific assembly of the District of Columbia Medical Society, Col. Rountree said that 800,000 or almost half of 1,800,000 selectees examined, had failed to met the physical standards.

Asked yesterday at his press conference whether part of the high rejections could be ascribed to higher physical standards, the President declared that although the requirements were high in some respects, in others, particularly in the Navy, they were slightly lower than in normal times.

CCC Enrollment Down 40%

CCC officials yesterday stated their willingness to undertake such a program, and indicated their concurrence with the Chief Executive's remark that a great number of the rejects had disabilities which could be corrected. They added, however, their doubt whether rejects would voluntarily enroll in the camps for physical conditioning. They believe, instead, that the program can be carried out only if curable rejects are directly assigned to the camps by the Army and are given partial credit on their Army term for the period in camp.

At the same time, it was revealed at the CCC, by the end of this month, the corps will have cut its number of camps from 1500 last April to 900, and will have reduced enrollment in the seven-month period from 280,000 to about 160,000, a drop of more than 40 per cent.

This phenomenal drop, officials said, derives from new job opportunities opening up in defense industries, from voluntary enlistments in the Army, and generally improved economic conditions.

Justice Brandeis' Condition Same; Still Is Critical

The condition of retired Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis, who was stricken ill of a heart attack here Wednesday, was described as "very grave" last night. He is 84.

Mrs. Brandeis and other members of the family are with the retired jurist at the Brandeis home, 2205 California Street Northwest. In attendance is Dr. Lewis C. Ecker, the family physician.

Justice Brandeis will be 85 November 13. Renowned for his liberalism, he retired from the Supreme Court bench on February 13, 1939, after serving nearly 23 years.

Man Who Shaped Nazi-Soviet War

It was not Hitler, according to Andre Visson, but a Balt named Rosenberg. Mr. Visson has written three articles for The Post, the first of which appears today on page 11. In them he presents a clear picture of the man he says has "stubbornly, passionately worked, fought, and intrigued to make possible the conquest of Russia."

Harriman Told to Act

U. S. Urging Russians to Free Religion, Roosevelt Discloses

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt made it known yesterday that the United States Government not only was hoping for the establishment of true religious freedom in Soviet Russia, but actually was using its influence toward that end.

The President said that he had instructed W. Averell Harriman, head of the American mission to Moscow, to take up with the Soviet government the question of religious freedom.

W. Averell Harriman

The next move would seem to be up to Premier Josef Stalin, who once was quoted as saying that the Communist Party "cannot be neutral toward religion, because all religion is something opposite to science."

The Right Rev. Msgr. Michael J. Ready, general secretary of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, who talked to President Roosevelt for 45 minutes on Thursday, said last night that the President's disclosure was a "welcome reassurance."

Msgr. Ready, who in a sense is the Washington representative of the Catholic hierarchy in the United States, issued the following statement:

"The statement of President Roosevelt today revealing his active efforts to bring about the termination of religious persecution in Russia, will receive the whole-hearted commendation of all who love freedom.

"Following the confusion and anxiety that arose last Tuesday from an allusion to provisions of the Soviet constitution on the subject of religion, the statement will be a welcome reassurance.

"Today's release from the White House is in keeping with the consistent attitude of the President and his oft-repeated appreciation of

Union Ratifies Hotel Dispute Settlement

Two Other Locals Will Vote on Terms Today or Tomorrow

A citywide strike of more than 3370 hotel employes, threatened since Tuesday, appeared early today to have been definitely averted.

Late in the day representatives of union and management agreed on terms for renewal of the working contract which expired at midnight Tuesday and last night the settlement was ratified at a mass meeting of the rank and file of one of the three union locals involved.

Some 500 members of Local 781 of the A. F. L. Hotel and Restaurant Employes Alliance, meeting in their headquarters at 1024 New Jersey Avenue Northwest, accepted terms of the agreement reached by their representatives after four days and nights of conferences with management representatives and Labor Department conciliators.

Under the agreement, workers will receive raises ranging from 10 to 22 per cent. They originally demanded raises of from 3 to 25 per cent, and the hotels had countered with an offer of a blanket 10 per cent raise.

Members of Local 781 ratified the settlement after a session that lasted until 12:30 a. m. and voted not to go on strike. Local 80 of the alliance will convene today or tomorrow to act on the settlement. The third local involved, A. F. L. Bartenders No. 75, will meet tomorrow.

At the conclusion of conferences between union and management representatives, Dr. John R. Steelman, director of the United States Labor Conciliation Service, said he was hopeful that a walkout would be averted.

Two other officers were reported aboard, Lieut. W. W. Krimm and Lieut. D. G. Boyd.

Traffic Safety Council Ready To Walk Out

Committee Angry At Commissioners' Disregard of Ideas

By Howard F. Wentworth
Post Staff Writer

Members of the Commissioners' Traffic Advisory Council are prepared to stage a wholesale walkout at their first fall meeting Thursday, accusing the city heads of ignoring past reports and recommendations, it was learned last night.

First indications of a split between the Commissioners and their citizen traffic advisers came late yesterday following a meeting of the legislation and enforcement committee in the office of Harry Wender, an attorney in the Woodward Building.

After nearly two hours of heated debate, the group brushed aside pending business and adopted one resolution with the unanimous agreement it should be the major subject of discussion at the forthcoming meeting. The resolution read, in part:

"How can the Commissioners use their traffic advisory council and how can the council be of maximum assistance to the Commissioners in improving Washington's critical traffic situation?"

It was reported that the council, in general, is strongly concerned over failure of the Commissioners to accord it proper recognition and a majority of members are ready to submit their resignations.

The council is composed of 31 civic, business and automobile club representaitves headed by Chairman Whitney Leary, local auto dealer.

Commissioners Invited

Many members of the group—each appointed by the Commissioners as a traffic adviser—are particularly perturbed, it was learned, because the council was not asked to send a delegate to the recent police-traffic conference held by Commissioner John Russell Young at the District Building.

An invitation, it was announced, will be extended to the three Commissioners and Police Chief Edward J. Kelly to be present at the coming meeting, to be held at the new municipal center.

A spokesman for the legislation and enforcement committee said following yesterday's session that a

Police Warned Not to 'Criticize' Reports by Jail Physician

Police Supt. Edward J. Kelly yesterday warned all policemen to stop immediately "bitter and public criticism" of the attending physician at the District Jail.

In a memorandum to the force, Maj. Kelly revealed apparent ill feeling between policemen and Dr. W. K. Angevine, jail doctor, because of the physician's reports about prisoners who charge police brutality.

Maj. Kelly promised "drastic disciplinary action" for any member of the force "who attempts to embarrass or discipline the doctor at the jail through the exercise of police authority."

Dr. Angevine, the one-man medical staff at the jail, said yesterday that it was his understanding that policemen hold him responsible for reports reaching police officials about the physical condition of jail prisoners.

"The policemen apparently think I have adopted this policy myself," Dr. Angevine explained. "The reports are sent to the Police Department after I submit them to my superiors—Thomas Rives, superintendent of the jail, and Ray L. Huff, superintendent of District penal institutions."

Physician at the jail for 11 years, Dr. Angevine said it was the system to have "sick call" every morning at the institution.

"Those who are ill or injured come to me for treatment at that time. I make up a report setting forth what they claim and then add the result of my examination. Those reports, which may include a prisoner's charge that he was

Great Offensive

By the United Press

Berlin, Oct. 3.—Axis armies have launched an offensive on the south Russian front, between the Dnieper River and the Donets industrial basin, that is sweeping the Red army before it at all points, a Hungarian communique claimed tonight.

The offensive is developing on "an ever growing scale," according to the communique, issued soon after Adolf Hitler announced in Berlin that gigantic new operations which would insure the defeat of Russia had been under way for 48 hours.

Axis forces are "completing their task with planned precision, but details cannot yet be published," the communique from Budapest said. It mentioned no specific localities, but the Germans have claimed to be advancing on Kharkov and the Crimea in that area.

"Terrific" Tank Battle

(Columbia Broadcasting System in New York heard the London radio report a "terrific" tank battle in progress east of Dnepropetrovsk. This report emanated from Radio Helsinki. C. B. S. also heard the Vichy radio report that German troops had forced a passage of the Perekop Isthmus, the 4-mile-wide stretch of land connecting the mainland with Crimea.)

On the Leningrad front, D.N.B. reported, the Germans have captured Sarsel Castle, the "Versailles of the East," southwest of the former Czarist capital.

("Sarsel Castle" may be Dyetskoye Selo, 15 miles from Leningrad, formerly Tsarkoye Selo, where the former imperial summer palaces are situated. The palaces since have been turned into museums and children's schools.)

Soviet troops in the "northern sector" attempted to dislodge two German divisions from their positions, D.N.B. said, but all attacks were said to have been repulsed with heavy Russian losses.

Fuehrer Scoffs At U. S. Billions, Blames War On Churchill

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Oct. 3.—Adolf Hitler, explaining his long silence by saying that he had not been able to speak until "the enemy had been hit so hard that he never again will rise up," declared today to the German people in his first speech since May that the paralyzing blow had now been dealt the Russians.

To cheering thousands, he announced that a "gigantic new development" had occurred on the eastern front in the last 48 hours, but beyond this he offered little new.

He came directly from the front to give a glowing review of German war successes, and, he asserted, everything in the campaign had gone according to plan. But he added:

"We were not mistaken about anything except that we did not know how awfully big were the preparations against us and how closely Europe escaped bolshevism."

Don't Talk Much, He Says

There was no direct mention whatever of the United States, but the Fuehrer made an oblique and sarcastic reference by declaring that Germany did not talk much about building armaments, and had no need to depend on capitalism to create national defense.

He declared triumphantly that contrary to the situation in the World War Germany now had unlimited arms and supplies and said that the only problem was one of transport.

Such vast stores had been accumulated, he added, that in the beginning of the war "I was able to lay idle the production of many materials . . . I know there is no longer any enemy which we could not overpower with the munitions on hand. And if you sometimes read in the newspapers about the gigantic plans of other states, what they all think they are going to do and begin, and when you hear about sums in the billions, then, my fellow citizens, remember what I am now saying:

Whole Continent Engaged

"In the service of this (the German) fight we have engaged the whole Continent."

Three points he emphasized, all dealing with the present status of the "new order."

"First," he repeated, "we are putting the whole Continent into our service.

"Second, we do not talk of capital but of the strength of labor.

"Third, that we are not talking doesn't mean that we are not acting."

Arming of Ships Urged

Sinking Stimulates Demand For Repeal of Neutrality Act

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Torpedoing of another American-owned ship in noncombat waters yesterday brought Congressional demands for swift repeal of the Neutrality Act prohibition on armed merchantmen.

Reports that the Administration is considering splitting the armed ship issue from the Neutrality Act controversy and limiting revision to repeal of that ban alone reached Congress with news of the latest ship sinking.

This move was suggested in the interest of quick action.

Word of the sinking, apparently closer to American continental territory than any previous one, brought no immediate comment from the White House, the State Department or the Navy, all of which were awaiting further details.

The I. C. White was the second American-owned ship to be sunk since President Roosevelt on September 11 gave the American Navy orders to shoot on sight when Axis raiders were encountered.

The other was the Pink Star, operated by the Maritime Commission under Panamanian registry, which was torpedoed and sunk September 19, about 255 miles southwest of Iceland. Twelve of her crew of 36 are missing.

The neutrality law forbids Americans from sailing on ships of belligerents and from sailing into combat zones. Americans were free to sign on the I. C. White, however, since the vessel, although under British orders, was of Panamanian registry and was plying waters outside the combat zones proclaimed by President Roosevelt.

The President meanwhile told reporters that undoubtedly there would be some effort made to revise the Neutrality Act but a final decision would await a bipartisan conference next week with Senate leaders.

The President, already on record for arming merchantmen, said he would not proceed to arm merchant

Lease-Lend Craft Is Sent Down Off Brazil, 34 Reported Saved

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 3.—The 7052-ton tanker I. C. White, owned by American interests and flying the flag of Panama, was torpedoed in the South Atlantic on September 27, the freighter West Nilus reported today in announcing rescue of 18 of the tanker's 37-man crew. All were believed Americans.

The West Nilus stated briefly that it had rescued the men from a lifeboat 450 miles east of Recife, Brazil.

Late this afternoon, the Standard Oil Co., of New Jersey, announced that the Moore-McCormack Line freighter Mormacrey had picked up 16 of the crew of the I. C. White, but said later it had no definite confirmation of the report, which it said was received via ticker with no indication of its source. The Moore-McCormack Line said it had had no word from the Mormacrey, due in Rio de Janeiro tonight or tomorrow, and had radioed the master.

Seventh Case of Kind

The International Freighting Corporation, operators of the West Nilus, said the freighter would take her 18 survivors to Recife, Brazil. The I. C. White was under the command of William Mello, of Everett, Mass.

Sinking of the I. C. White, owned by the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey through a subsidiary, the Panama Transport Co., was the seventh of an American-owned ship since the outbreak of the war.

It apparently occurred in the same general area but slightly to the west of the spot where the American flag freighter Robin Moor was torpedoed May 21. The Egyptian flag liner Zam Zam was destroyed farther south by a German raider on April 17.

Under British Orders

Standard Oil, declaring the tanker was en route to Capetown, South Africa, from Curacao, said the tanker was one turned over to Great Britain under the Lend-Lease Act. Although she operated under British orders, she was of Panamanian registry and had an American crew.

Built at Chester, Pa, in 1920, she had an oil cargo capacity of 78,000 barrels. She left Curacao September 14.

Denial of Right To Vote Feared By Lindbergh

Even 1942 Election May Be Suspended, He Warns in Indiana

By the United Press

Fort Wayne, Ind., Oct. 3.—Charles A. Lindbergh charged tonight that President Roosevelt was moving toward suspension of the 1942 national elections.

He said that "one man" government already had plunged the country into undeclared warfare and deprived the people of their democratic heritage.

"I shall speak to you tonight as though this were my last address," Lindbergh told an America First rally and a national radio (NBC Blue Network) audience. "How much longer free speech will be possible in the United States, I do not know."

He said he feared that an administration which had thrown the Nation "into undeclared naval war" against the will of the people "can by similar means prevent freedom of speech among us."

Charges "Smear Campaigns"

"If the time comes when we can no longer meet face to face, as free men in a free country, we will meet together at the elections next year and, by our vote, clasp hands, though we be a thousand miles apart," he declared. "But what if there are no elections next year?"

Abrogation of the right to vote, Lindbergh asserted, "may not be many steps ahead" on the course pursued by President Roosevelt.

"The time has come," he said, "when we must consider even that."

Without referring to his September 11 address at Des Moines in which he identified "the British, the

6 Synagogues Blasted in Paris Terror Wave

Prague's Mayor Is Seized as Nazis Pile Up Execution Toll

By the Associated Press

Rightist terrorism burst upon German-occupied Paris yesterday as six Jewish synagogues were wrecked by bombs, while in other Nazi-controlled lands executions and other repressive measures were carried out by the Germans with continuing severity.

In one of the edifices blasted by the terrorists, the Sephardic synagogue, the remains of James Rothschild, founder of the House of Rothschild, were destroyed.

The mayor of Prague, capital of the Czech Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia, was sentenced to death, charged with leading an elaborate plot declared in Berlin to have been inspired abroad.

[The New York Times reported a Russian rumor that President Hacha of Bohemia-Moravia had resigned and was under house arrest.]

Yugoslavia Hardest Hit

Totals made public in London and Berlin for the period since the beginning of the Russian war June 22 indicated that former Yugoslavia had seen the most executions.

Berlin estimated that at least 266 had been executed in Croatia and 113 more in the remainder of former Yugoslavia. Unofficial estimates in London put the Yugoslav figure at 60,000, and although this was discounted as far too high, London sources agreed the number put to death was large.

The totals of German executions for Occupied France were given in Nazi-occupied Paris as 71, in London as 400. The Czech figures were

Treasury to Offer $1,250,000,000 In U. S. Securities

The United States Treasury plans to borrow one billion dollars or more next week in what may be the biggest cash financing operation since the World War era.

Secretary Morgenthau said yesterday that he plans to sell Government securities to raise between one billion and $1,250,000,000, barring unforeseen developments that might upset financial markets. If the sales reach the latter figure, the transaction will be the largest since the Great War and will top the $1,106,000,000 borrowed in 1936 to pay the soldiers' bonus.

The borrowing is part of the Administration's program to pay rising defense costs, which are being met by increased taxes and also by such financing operations as were announced yesterday.

Trapped 'Chutist Fast Becomes Old Man of the Mountain

By the United Press

Devil's Tower, Wyo., Oct. 3.—George Hopkins, 29-year-old Texas parachutist, was left stranded for his third night atop the cold and wind-swept summit of the 865-foot Devil's Tower when two veteran mountain climbers failed late today in an attempt to scale its walls to rescue him.

Ernest K. Field and Warren Gorrell, United States Park Service rangers, abandoned the climb because of darkness. They will try again tomorrow. Gorrell slipped and fell a dozen feet before a safety rope broke his fall.

Hopkins, who dropped to the top of the pinnacle by parachute on a bet, said he was resigned to spending another night there but complained because he had no company.

"I wish the rangers would come on," he penciled on a paper bag and tossed to the crowd below.

Hopkins was comfortable in a tent with plenty of blankets dropped to the top of the peak by airplane. The 115-pound daredevil today asked for a pint of whiskey, and it was dropped to him.

Morgenthau Escapes Crash As Plane Grazes Treetops

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 3.—Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., narrowly escaped a crash today when his Coast Guard plane scraped treetops over the New Hackensack (N. Y.) Airport, on a flight from Washington, but he calmly began reading a historical book when the ship gained altitude.

Reading "Reveille in Washington" was the best contribution he could make toward insuring a safe landing, he said, when he arrived here tonight.

Lieut. William Sinton, the pilot, brought the plane down safely at the Philadelphia Airport despite its damaged wing, rudder and undercarriage while the airport's emergency crew in asbestos suits and a crash wagon stood by in case fire developed.

"We were approaching the New Hackensack Airport and the pilot was dipping the plane through the fog preparatory to landing, in the belief there was a 1000-foot ceiling," Morgenthau related.

"The instruments must have been wrong. I was watching out the side of the plane as we went through the fog. The next thing I knew I saw the trees directly beneath us, only a few feet from the plane. The plane scraped the trees, but Lieut. Sinton gave it the gun, kept control, and we climbed several thousand feet."

Morgenthau was profuse in his praise of Sinton.

British Call Off Exchange Of Prisoners

By Eddy Gilmore

Newhaven, Eng., Oct. 3 (AP).—British authorities called a sudden halt tonight to exchange under the protection of a mercy truce of some 3000 German and British prisoners of war, although the crippled and blinded Germans already had been carried or led aboard two hospital ships in this strangely brilliant harbor.

The war office announced postponement of the repatriation just as the second of the two ships was ready to sail and the first already had moved out to await a dawn escort.

Although British bombers attacked Channel ports in occupied France throughout the day and continued their attacks this evening. There has been no word of any raid in the area about Dieppe, the destination of the hospital ships, and no specific reason was given for the postponement.

Under the agreement 1500 Germans are to be exchanged at Dieppe some five hours by sea from Newhaven, for 1500 wounded Tommies. The Tommies will be returned in the same ships, Dinard and St. Gulien.

The war office announcement said merely that the delay was occasioned by a message from Berlin and added that "the government is in communication with the German government and it is to be hoped it will be possible to make a further statement within 24 hours."

Hitler Is Answered

London (Saturday), Oct. 4 (U.P.)—Russia's radio pirate had virtually his own way last night during recorded broadcasts of Hitler's speech.

Time after time the Russian's voice cut in. Here are samples of the "dialogue" which resulted from the Russian interruptions:

Hitler—For 48 hours a gigantic operation has been in progress which will help defeat the enemy in the east . . .

Voice—Don't worry. Timoshenko, Voroshilov and Budenny will give you a showdown. One day I may hang you myself.

Hitler—Our soldiers stand at the gates of Leningrad . . .

Voice—And how long have they been standing there?

Hitler—Our divisions have marched 2000 kilometers into Russia . . .

now have been taken, he added, along with 22,000 Red guns in German hands, 18,000 tanks destroyed or captured and 14,500 Russian planes destroyed.

The Russian forces he called "not human beings but animal beasts," adding: "That's what bolshevism has made of them."

Speaking mainly of Britain, he declared that well knowing the "blood, misery, suffering and sacrifice" of war, he had sought peace, but his repeated efforts had been rebuffed.

"Churchill," said the Fuehrer, "kept saying: 'I want war!' "

"Well"—and this was snapped off sharply—"He has it now!"

He insisted Stalin had from the beginning failed to live up to the German-Russian pact.

"By August and September of last year," he went on, "it became clear that I had an enemy in the back ready to stab at any time."

But, he said, surprise was one of his weapons and when he saw an opponent preparing to attack it was his policy to beat him to it.

"It was the hardest decision of my life," he added.

He remarked that "it must have been Providence" which prevented Germany from coming to an understanding with Poland—apparently implying that greater objectives were now possible.

"We gained friendship with Italy and Japan," he said, "but unfortunately not with that nation I courted most—Britain.

"Now the British people must assume the responsibility. . . .

"If the warmongers did not realize before that this war is no longer a good thing for England, they will now perceive that as truly as I stand here."

"The decision presently being fought out," he shouted in apparent reference to the Russian campaign, "is for the next hundred years."

Stalin Opened Door on Secret Data for Hopkins

Harry Hopkins, President Roosevelt's personal emissary to Joseph Stalin, brought back with him to the United States more than 80 pages of notes on the economic and military position of the Soviets, an authoritative source disclosed yesterday.

Hopkins, who was instructed by the President, this informant said, to break down the wall of secrecy which has surrounded the Soviet military, found no wall, but a well-informed leader who rattled off figures on every subject which Hopkins raised without referring to official documents on more than two or three occasions.

Stalin does not speak English and Hopkins knows no Russian. However, this bridge was crossed through an interpreter. Hopkins, fearful that the Russian leader would not disclose the data which the President had requested him to get, was shocked to hear Stalin answer every question he put to him.

The facts obtained by Hopkins were the basis for the intensified policy of the British and American governments to render all the help possible to bolster Russian resist-

Breakthrough Around Gomel and Advances Of 13 Miles Claimed

By the United Press

Moscow (Saturday), Oct. 4.—Russian troops have broken through the German lines in a slashing counteroffensive on the Gomel sector of the central front, sweeping through dozens of villages and advancing "upwards of 13 miles," war dispatches said today.

A successful engagement on the Southern front was announced by the high command, which said that Red airplanes and infantrymen smashed a German mechanized assault there, destroying 25 tanks and armored cars and capturing 300 armored cars and motorcycles.

The war dispatches concerning the central front said that Marshal Timoshenko, commanding Russian forces in the center, was continuing his "persistent" counteroffensive against the Nazis.

Troops in the sector around Gomel were reported to have recaptured "dozens" of settlements.

Village Recaptured Before Leningrad

Copyright by New York Times

Moscow, Oct. 3.—New counter-attacks in the Leningrad region have succeeded in dislodging the Germans from yet another village and in establishing advance Russian positions on the south bank of the River "V" it was reported today. On other salients Soviet troops advanced 2 miles at some points.

One company under the command of Capt. Sokoloff, which recaptured the village "P" and beat off Nazi thrusts after occupying an important bridgehead, was mentioned in a special order of the day issued by the Leningrad war council.

On this salient, it is apparent that the Germans are decidedly on the defensive. They buried 20 heavy tanks in order to convert them into pillboxes and supported them with one artillery battery and two mortars, but nevertheless were forced to retreat. Persistent Finnish attacks on Hangoe Peninsula have been repulsed, it is said, and far across the Finnish Gulf, German naval attacks, south of Oesel Island, which sought to penetrate the Irben Gulf were defeated with great losses to the enemy.

Ten Nazi planes were shot down over the island and five destroyers which sought to approach the coast were forced back by the shore batteries; one ship was heavily damaged. It was revealed this afternoon that the three German warships sunk a few days ago were a cruiser of the Cologne class and two Jaguar destroyers.

Stubborn fighting continued along all fronts. A Nazi armored column made a sudden effort to break through east of Gomel but after taking a village was forced back by a counter-attack. On another salient of the central sector, Russian tanks broke up a German effort to encircle an infantry detachment.

In the extreme south the Germans succeeded in occupying "B" village and tried to split the Russian lines but Soviet counter-attacks were said to have inflicted heavy losses.

On the Odessa sailient two new Rumanian attacks were repelled in bayonet charges.

Canberra, Australia, Oct. 3.—After 34 days in office, the Fadden government fell today and Labor Leader John Curtin was called to form a new government. He is Australia's fifth labor prime minister.

Arthur W. Fadden's defeat followed a debate on the budget.

Votes of Alex Wilson, Independent, from wheat-growing Wimmera, Victoria, and A. W. Coles, former Lord Mayor of Melbourne and chain store proprietor, who left the United Australia Party after the resignation of Robert G. Menzies, gave Curtin control. Cole's support of the budget had been generally assumed and there was tremendous excitement when he voted against the government.

Jews and the Roosevelt Administration" as major "agitators for war," Lindbergh said he recently had been the target of "smear campaigns" based upon "falsely ascribed" motives and "distorted" meanings.

"I have no motive in mind other than the welfare of my country and my civilization," he said. "This is not a life that I enjoy. Speaking is not my vocation, and political life is not my ambition. I have done this because I believe my country is in mortal danger."

Led Along Like Children

He said he was "pitting everything I had" against the Administration's drive toward national destruction, and that while he was telling the "truth as I saw it," none of his statements had been disproved.

"As a Nation, we have been led along like children, with sugared promises and candied pills," Lindbergh said. "We are approaching a point where we are no longer governed by the will of the people.

"We are, in fact, governed by one man who has consistently evaded the checks and balances on which representative government depends—a man who is drawing more and more dictatorial powers into his own hands."

Challenging the Nation to 'face the truth "that you and I and our generation have lost our American heritage," he summoned a revival of the "spirit that built America," on which, he said, "we must rely."

He said he would continue to organize and to hold meetings among opponents of the Administration's foreign policy "as long as freedom stands erect in America."

Today's reports say the Yugoslav puppet government has been threatened with dissolution by the German military authorities unless northern and central Serbia are brought to submission. The interior minister has resigned and his portfolio taken by the puppet premier, Gen. Milan Neditch.

British Down 10% of German Planes in Raid

By David Anderson

Copyright by New York Times

London, (Saturday), Oct. 4.—Germany lost three bombers and probably more, according to the air ministry and the ministry of home security, while attacking this country, Thursday night. It is unofficially estimated that the enemy employed 30 or 40 planes on its main target in the northeast (claimed by Berlin to be Newcastle) which, if true, means that the British defenders exacted a toll of 10 per cent, making the raid theoretically unprofitable.

It was the second time in the last three nights that the same area had been attacked. The latest one resulted in extensive damage and the number of deaths is feared to be high. The raid was described as among the worst on the northeast coast.

Canadian Gets Two

Two of the raiders fell victims of a Canadian wing-commander who scored his first success as a night pilot of a Beaufighter only a few nights ago. On Thursday night he shot down a Heinkel-111 into the sea three miles off-shore and then at about the same distance out from Tynemouth, he set a Dornier-17 ablaze.

There were casualties on the south coast of England Thursday night but the attack never reached the intensity of the one farther north.

A small force of Royal Air Force heavy bombers raided Brest Thursday night and early Friday morning. Other aircraft bombed docks and shipyards at St. Nazaire. All British machines returned.

Supply Ship Attacked

Yesterday morning British fighters attacked an enemy supply vessel off Gravelines. It was escorted by seven "Flak" ships. One of these was reported to have been sunk with three more set afire as was also the supply vessel. The three remaining members of the convoy were said to have been badly damaged.

Ostend was attacked yesterday afternoon by Blenheim bombers which started numerous fires along the waterfront. One German fighter was destroyed and three British fighters are missing.

The German long-range guns on the French coast fired eight shells at a small group of ships in the Straits of Dover at noon yesterday. The shells sent spouts of water high into the air, violently rocking buildings on the Kentist coast.

Deer Hunting On NYA Field Trip Charged

By the Associated Press

A deer hunting expedition in Montana and Christmas card printing in Utah were among incidents reported by investigators of the National Youth Administration employment agencies.

These items and others were mentioned yesterday in a report filed with the House Appropriations Committee by Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren.

He said investigations, upon which the report was based, produced "numerous irregularities or questionable transactions, many of which, if continued, would apparently prevent the youth of the country from reciving full benefit of funds appropriated by Congress."

Got Per Diem

The Montana incident involved a letter from Robert Ansley, field representative for the NYA division of guidance and placement, written October 31, 1938, to J. B. Love, Montana State director at Helena. It was quoted as follows:

"I am still no deer hunter, having ridden a day and a half up and down mountains without seeing one deer to shoot at. I enjoyed working with you in Montana and really appreciate your taking time out to go with me."

Warren said an examination of leave records showed that Ansley was not charged with annual leave during the month of October, 1938. He said records showed that Ansley received $228.95 in per diem and other expenses for the period September 29 to November 9, 1938, and plane and train travel allowances of $353.72 during the same period, largely in Montana.

U. S. Paid for Cards

Regarding the Utah incident, Warren said: "There was no file in the NYA, Christmas cards which were apparently printed at Government expense.

"In the State of Utah, a Christmas greeting card was printed showing a picture of a building on the face of the card with the statement thereunder: 'A part time resident center.' On the inside folder of the card there was contained the following statement: 'Greetings for 1940. Utah State staff, National Youth Administration.'"

"Those who have hoped that the powerful influence of the United States might be an instrument to obtain for the Russian people the realization of the greatest of the freedoms will earnestly pray that our Government's efforts may meet with success.

"I might add that it has been particularly heartening to note in the press the immediate and Nation-wide reaction in defense of the cherished place religious freedom has in our American life."

Mr. Roosevelt told about his instructions to Harriman at his regular Friday morning press conference. He did not say when he gave the instructions to Harriman. He did say, however, that the question had been taken up previously with the Russian government. From this it was deduced that the matter had been handled by Laurence Steinhardt, the United States Ambassador in Moscow.

The President said that he had received no report from Harriman, and could not say, therefore, whether his overtures had met with success.

Asked whether Myron Taylor, his special emissary to the Vatican, had discussed the Russian situation with Pope Pius XII, the President said that the answer would have to await Mr. Taylor's return to this country.

The President's remarks yesterday constituted a third chapter in a controversy that has clearly had the White House worried. It began at a press conference last Tuesday afternoon. Answering the question of a reporter, the President called attention to Article 124 of the Russian constitution, covering religious liberty. He said this was essentially "what is the rule in this country; only we don't put it quite the same way."

Newspaper reports of the President's remarks kicked up a squall of criticism. This was continuing even yesterday, with the Most Rev. Gerald Shaughnessy, Roman Catholic Bishop of Seattle, characterizing the President's statement as "inexpressibly shocking," and the Baltimore Catholic Review saying the President had "played into the hands of the Red murderer of Moscow." Both apparently had been set in type before the President clarified his remarks.

On Thursday the White House issued a formal statement expressing the hope that an entering wedge for complete religious freedom in Russia had been started. The Statement said the President's Tuesday remarks had been the subject of some conflicting "interpretations" and that there had also been some misquotations. Therefore the stenographic transcript of his remarks was made public.

Then yesterday came the revelation that the President, through Harriman, was actively using his enormous influence to persuade Stalin to give real meaning to Article 124.

Half a Million Overcoats Sought For British Relief

The British War Relief Society has launched a campaign to procure half a million discarded overcoats for British civilian defense workers, the society announced yesterday.

SARAZEN

Eighteen retail stores, in 18 key cities including Washington, have been selected as local representatives in the drive. The Hecht Company, Seventh and F Streets Northwest, is the Washington representative.

All of the 18 stores will be headquarters for collection of the overcoats, working in cooperation with local chapters of the British War Relief, it was said. Announcement of the selected stores was made by Bert M. Sarazan, publicity director of the Hecht Company and National chairman for the British War Relief campaign.

'Mania' for Divorce Assailed by Pope

Pontiff Also Sharply Attacks Race Laws For Marriage and Sterilization

By Herbert L. Matthews

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Oct. 3.—Sterilization, racial marriage laws and the "mania for divorce" were condemned by Pope Pius XII in an address inaugurating the new juridical year of the Sacred Roman Rota this morning.

Pius XII began by contrasting the traditional serenity of the Church with the upheaval throughout the world and by implication contrasted ecclesiastical justice with that in certain other countries. Church law, he said, offered "to all peoples and nations, to all the races and languages, the same juridical situation and has granted to the Lord's flock an order in which unity and vastness, liberty and discipline are wonderfully joined, animated and sustained."

3 Points in Speech

The Pope particularly discussed three points in his speech—the right to marriage, annulment and the dissolution of the matrimonial bond. He cited his predecessors, Leo XIII and Pius XI, who said that "no human law can take from man the natural and primitive right of marriage." Vatican authorities stated that the Pope was here referring in part to sterilization which takes away that right.

"This right," continued the Pope, "since it was given by the author of Nature and the Supreme Legislator to man, cannot be denied to man by anybody unless it be proved that he has either freely renounced or is incapable of contracting matrimony through mental or physical defects."

Reiterates Rota's Severity

With regard to the annulment of marriages the Pope reiterated how severe the rota has been in trying such cases.

Finally, Pius XII discussed "the dissolution of a validly contracted tie," which, he said, was only done by the Pope himself in "very rare cases."

"It is true," he said, "that in our times during which scorn or indifference to religion has revived the joyous and proud spirit of a new paganism, one finds in some places almost a mania for divorce that contracts and dissolves marriages with greater ease than leases between landlords and tenants."

This is the first inaugural ceremony in which an American auditor took part. Among the 12 auditors present was Msgr. Francis James Brennan, who arrived too late last autumn to attend the ceremony.

FPC Considering Power Rationing For New England

By the Associated Press

The Federal Power Commission disclosed yesterday it was considering a plan for rationing electricity to industries over a large portion of New England to assure adequate energy for vital defense plants.

Thomas R. Tate, director of the defense power unit, said the situation, due to extended drought, was "especially critical" throughout New England, if rains do not arrive very shortly."

The official also reported that the power situation again was approaching the critical stage in the Southeast.

Georgia Denies Shortage

Atlanta, Oct. 3. (AP)—Walter R. McDonald, chairman of the Georgia Public Service Commission, asserted today that the South has sufficient power to meet all industrial needs and charged that contrary statements by the chairman of the Federal Power Commission were "most unfair."

Gen. Payne Loses Command Of 43d Division

The War Department said yesterday that Maj. Gen. Morris B. Payne, 56, had been relieved of command of the 43rd Division of the Connecticut National Guard.

As senior officer, Brig. Gen. Harold R. Barker has assumed command of the division which is now returning to Camp Blanding, Fla., from the Army maneuvers in Louisiana.

Gen. Payne's removal was the first involving a division commander since last month's full scale Army maneuvers in Louisiana which Secretary Stimson and top military officials had announced in advance would be a "laboratory" to test the fitness of officers.

A War Department spokesman said that Gen. Payne was relieved "on recommendation of the General commanding the Army." The 43d Division is attached to the Third Army, commanded by Lieut. Gen. Walter Kreuger.

Rising Prices Seen Hiking Defense Cost

Patterson Agrees Increase May Be 25 to 35 Per Cent

By Hedley Donovan
Post Staff Writer

Undersecretary of War Patterson yesterday concurred in a Congressional etsimate that mounting prices, if not soon checked by legislation, might add as much as 12 billion dollars to the cost of the defense program.

Appearing before the House Banking and Currency Committee to urge prompt passage of the Administration's price-control bill, Patterson said it was "probably conservative" to state that a rising price could increase by 25 to 35 per cent the cost to the Government of the defense program already authorized by Congress.

With 53 billion dollars authorized for defense expenditures and only 7 billion so far spent, Representative Crawford (Republican), of Michigan, asked if it could be assumed that the cost of the remainder of the program would be boosted by 10 or 12 billion dollars if the price of materials and services going into the defense effort is permitted to rise. Patterson agreed with Crawford's estimate.

Wage Ceiling Urged

The defense official, questioned by committee members, said he believed some ceiling on wages was "necessary and inevitable and would be of benefit to all concerned." The price control bill does not provide any.

Patterson, although believing the Government had authority to put a ceiling over wages, declined to advocate specific legislation.

Representative Mills (Democrat), of Arkansas, asked if Patterson would favor "some provision with teeth in it that would prevent increased wages." The witness replied, "unless the matter acn be handled feasibly in some other way."

Patterson said price control legislation was essential for Army morale, which might be seriously impaired by "the sight of unregulated inflation and profiteering in the Nation as a whole."

Hits at Profiteering

"We should not provide an opportunity for anyone to say to the men, whether with or without substantial justification, that certain sellers of goods or services are taking advantage of the emergency to enrich themselves unduly," he added.

Patterson said the price control program to date had been surprisingly successful, but that the time had come "to establish the control of prices on a more explicit basis and with more appropriate sanctions."

He recommended a broad grant of power to the price control agency, with authority concentrated in a single administrator, warning that 'piecemeal, half-hearted action will not serve to forestall the disaster of unchecked inflation."

When Representative Patman (Democrat), of Texas, asked Patterson's opinion of Secretary Morgenthau's proposal that corporate profits be limited to 6 per cent for the duration of the emergency, the witness said he agreed with the "objectives" of the Treasury chief's suggestion.

Might Be a "Strain"

"The only question," he said, "is whether a flat limit like that is too much of an obstruction to individual incentive."

Patman observed that the Government "seems to get pretty good service out of these dollar-a-year men, who have no financial incentive, so you should be able to get the same out of the manufacturers for 6 per cent."

"You ought to be able to," Patterson replied, "but it might be too much of a strain."

Committee hearings on the price control bill probably will be concluded Wednesday or Thursday, Chairman Steagall (Democrat), of Alabama, said yesterday. Spokesmen for organized labor will testify Monday.

Spy Report On Roosevelt Is Disclosed

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 3.—A confessed German spy submitted a report on January 27, 1941, that "Churchill is supposed to have been here with the George V, and Roosevelt was seen on board with Knox," it was disclosed today at the trial of 16 men charged with conspiracy espionage.

(President Roosevelt met the new British battleship King George V off Baltimore and took ashore Lord Halifax, new British Ambassador to Washington, on January 24.)

William G. Sebold, American counter-espionage agent, testified that the message was given him for transmission to Germany by Erwin G. Siegler, chief butcher aboard the steamship America, who said the information had come from George G. Schuh, an East Orange, N. J., carpenter. Siegler and Schuh are among 17 who have pleaded guilty to the indictment.

Blueprints Revealed

"Siegler and Schuh insisted it was true," said Sebold, when he identified the message. Franz Stigler (the America's chief baker who is on trial) and I knew it ain't true."

Also introduced into evidence were detailed blueprints of each deck of the America, the largest passenger ship ever built in the United States. It is now the West Point, a troop transport.

"On January 25," testified Sebold, "Richard H. Kleiss (a seaman now on trial) gave me these. He had marked the positions where guns were being installed. I was to send these to Germany."

A list of yachts and other vessels reconditioned by the Navy was introduced as having come from Leo Waalen, another defendant.

Acting As Own Lawyer

Meanwhile, Carl Herman Chroetter, former Miami, Fla., charter boat operator, appeared in Manhattan Federal Court and informed Judge John W. Holland that he had decided to act as his own lawyer in his defense against espionage charges, to which he pleaded innocent.

The indictment charged Schroetter was a member of a spy ring allegedly headed by Kurt Frederick Ludwig, described by the Government as a Nazi master spy.

Judge Holland set Schroetter's trial for October 20 and continued bail of $25,000.

Viereck Testifies Two Hours While Attorney Waits

George Sylvester Viereck, admitted German propaganda agent, testified yesterday before the District grand jury, which is investigating the activities of Nazi agents.

Viereck was accompanied to the hearing by Daniel F. Cohalen, jr., New York attorney, who waited during nearly two hours while the propagandist testified.

Special Assistant Attorneys General George A. McNulty, William Power Maloney and Edward J. Hickey called no other witnesses yesterday. They indicated that they would have more questions to ask Viereck next week.

The special prosecutors said Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat, of the District Court, will be asked to continue the authority of the grand jurors, whose term expires Monday, for a special investigation of Nazi propaganda activities. If this is done, the body will function as a special grand jury, concentrating on the propaganda inquiry and leaving regular criminal cases to the new grand jury.

The President's Day

By International News Service

GETAWAY: In the lingo of railbirds this was getaway day for the President. At the close of another hectic week and with important new chapters in world history about to unfold, the White House hummed smoothly toward a quiet weekend, with the Boss away at his New Yord home.

NOSES FOR NEWS: Some sixth sense apparently forewarned the Capital correspondents that the brush was in store for them at the regular Friday morning press conference and they stayed away in large numbers. To the smallest group of reporters he has received in many weeks, Mr. Roosevelt nodded off most questions, relented only insofar as to reveal his latest step in attempting to reopen the church doors in Russia, and to fill them in on his plans regarding the Neutrality Act.

POTPOURRI: The rest of the morning was eaten up by calls from Joseph E. Davies, former Ambassador and now working out a plan for his Chief on how to keep the multitude of allied and American charities from overlapping; from venerable Editor William Allen White, who is just like that with the Presiden on foreign policy, and from Norman Davis, Red Cross chief.

MEET THE CHAMP: Wendell Willkie finally got his chance to be on the same program with "Champ" Roosevelt, but there was no debate between the friendly enemies. Both talked up the 1941 Community Chest drive in a Nation-wide broadcast. The President was piped in from the White House shortly before he entrained for New York.

Much Defense Housing Futile, Carmody Says

By the Associated Press

John M. Carmody, Federal Works administrator, declared yesterday that defense housing units, many of them now unoccupied, were built "without reason" because of the "very great insistence" of the defense housing coordinator's office.

Carmody, testifying before the special Senate Defense Investigation Committee, said that the Government built accommodations for 750 men at San Diego, Calif., but that only 44 of the dormitory rooms were occupied.

The same situation exists, Carmody said, in the Boston area, where "the shipyard workers did not want to live in our buildings." In Nashville, Tenn., the administrator testified, 65 per cent of housing facilities for aircraft workers were unoccupied.

Says Palmer Insisted

Carmody said his office and that of Charles F. Palmer, defense housing coordinator, "disagreed to the point of irritation" over the question of constructing housing facilities for single men employed in aircraft industries. Palmer's insistence, he testified, resulted in the construction of units now unoccupied.

Carmody said he had believed from the start that proposals which led to housing construction in the Boston area were "preposterous suggestions."

"I don't yet see the business sense of doing what was done," he testified, "and I believe I'm the only one who has said publicly that it was a mistake, except perhaps the workers themselves who were supposed to benefit."

Project Half Empty

Carmody said the defense housing coordinator persisted in advocating the development "and it doesn't take much poison spread around to make it look like a fellow like me isn't cooperating in the defense effort."

Hugh Fulton, committee counsel, said he had been informed that of 200 housing units ready at Houston, Tex., in July, only 100 were occupied last month. Carmody said this was caused because only 10 per cent of the expected personnel at Ellington Field have arrived. He added that some prospective tenants objected to the units because of lack of garages.

Tumulty Kin Urges Irish Groups to Support President

The feud among the Irish produced another broadside yesterday, this time from T. James Tumulty, secretary of the Committee for American Irish Defense.

Mr. Tumulty, who lives in Jersey City and is a nephew of Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to President Woodrow Wilson, trained his guns on the United Irish Societies of Washington. This latter organization, on Thursday, made public a resolution condemning those in this country who were trying to "influence" Ireland's attitude toward the war.

Tumulty said:

"A certain resolution passed by the alleged United Irish Societies of Washington, D. C., has been brought to my attention. I am informed that there is no such duly authorized society in Washington. The alleged resolution pretends to speak for 'the people of Ireland,' it makes no mention of the people of America. It pretends to speak 'in simple justice and decency' yet at the same time it omits any condemnation of Nazilism or Hitlerism. I do not believe that this alleged committee is representative of any body except those who, in their hearts, long for a Nazi victory.

"It is time for Americans of Irish descent to unite as their ancestors have done behind the President of the United States, and to stand up and be counted for the cause of liberty. Differences between us now only serve Hitler's purpose. We believe that we represent the overwhelming majority of loyal Americans of Irish descent in this country."

Bar Association Elects Armstrong; Pepper Honored

Indianapolis, Oct. 3 (AP).—With election of Walter P. Armstrong, 57, of Memphis, as president, the American Bar Association neared the close today of its sixty-fourth convention.

Secretary Harry S. Knight, of Sunbury, Pa., and Treasurer John H. Voorhees, of Sioux Falls, S. D., were reelected and Guy R. Crump, of Los Angeles was named, without opposition, to the chairmanship of the House of Delegates.

Detroit was chosen for the 1942 convention, which will meet the week of August 24.

Former Senator George Wharton Pepper, Philadelphia, Pa., last night was awarded the association medal for distinguished service, signifying "the greatest contribution to the science of jurisprudence."

Movie Inquiry To Resume Oct. 13

Resumption of the Senate subcommittee investigation of alleged war propaganda in the movies will be postponed another week, Chairman Clark (Democrat), of Idaho, announced yesterday.

Because of the absence from the city of two subcommittee members, the hearings will not be resumed until October 13, Clark said. The subcommittee originally had planned to start hearings again Monday, after a 10-day recess.

Nation Must Unite, Gen. Drum Warns

Warburg Optimistic

Job Outlook After War Deemed Good

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Oct. 3.—Frederick M. Warburg, a director of the National Recreation Association and chairman of the final general session of the twenty-sixth National Recreation Congress, said today that the assembly was "one of the most remarkable exhibitions of national unity" he ever had witnessed.

Nearly 1700 delegates—recreation leaders from every section of the United States—completed a week-long session this morning in which recreation in all its phases was examined in a series of 42 group discussions.

"There are going to be many jobs after the war that people do not know about as yet. No one is going to loaf," he said.

He summarized the work of the five-day convention and envisioned a post-war era in which persons would participate in a two-job curriculum—a regular job for about five hours a day, and a secondary job which would take up the slack in expanded leisure time imposed by the efficiency of new developments in machinery.

"There will be jobs in crafts, truck gardening, recreation and other lines of work," Warburg explained. "The National Recreation Association has given study to the problem and the Government is going to need our leaders.

"On the West Coast things seem to have progressed more than in the East so far as providing recreation for both young and old. But that is probably because the Western cities are newer and planned later. The East is bound to follow."

In an earlier discussion group, James Mulholland, recreation director of New York City's department of parks, said:

"We have found that there has been a decrease in delinquency and vandalism and street accidents at night in districts where we have floodlighted playgrounds and recreation areas."

Discussing the special recreation problems of the smaller towns and cities, Frederick Martin, superintendent of recreation at Brattleboro, Vt., emphasized the importance of taking full advantage of all community resources, "thereby immeasurably easing the problems of the small town recreation department and incidentally strengthening its position in the community."

Gandhi Labels Hitler a 'Curse Sent by God'

Wardhaganj, India, Oct. 3 (U.P.).—Mohandas K. Gandhi urged today that the peoples of all invaded and occupied countries of Europe adopt a policy of "nonviolence and non-cooperation."

"Even Hitler, whom God sent as a deserved curse on mankind because of their ungodly ways, couldn't cope with genuine civil disobedience," the Indian Nationalist leader said on his seventy-third birthday.

Any other policy for the conquered peoples would be "disgraceful, and would rob the soul of its greatest contribution," he said. "It (nonviolence) is the only means of lasting salvation."

large number of council members have expressed dissatisfaction with the Commissioners' action on their proposals and suggestions for traffic betterment.

"We intend," said the spokesman, "to let our hair down at the next meeting and we certainly hope the Commissioners are on hand to hear us."

The committee which met yesterday includes Wender as chairman, Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the District division, American Automobile Association; William Cameron, safety adviser at the Labor Department; H. M. Starling, businessman, and Col. L. C. Crawford, former chairman of the Board of Trade traffic committee.

Meanwhile yesterday, Commissioner Young said "no one is going to be made the goat" in a contemplated survey of fatalities and personnel at the Department of Vehicles and Traffic.

He said the city heads were going into the inquiry "with an open mind" and that no position—from Director William A. Van Duzer down—was yet in jeopardy.

"We will try to correct what faults are found," said Young, "and if we find any alterations in personnel are necessary, we will make them."

First Army Chief Addresses 25,000 Troops at Monroe

By Marshall Andrews

A Post Staff Correspondent

Monroe, N. C., Oct. 3.—On the eve of the largest military maneuvers ever staged in the East, Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, commanding the First Field Army, today called on the people of the United States to unite before "an avalanche of hostile military might moves to overwhelm us."

"Inevitably," Drum told 25,000 officers and noncommissioned officers on the Fair Grounds here, "the time arrives when action must be substituted for argument or the cause will be lost. Isolation, intervention, fear of the dominance of German military strength—all these topics of national discussion today only beg the question.

"To be preoccupied with endless debates on such topics results in distracting us from the real issue. As I see this issue, we are faced with the necessity of answering simple questions:

"Will we unite to preserve our freedom?

"Will we curtail personal comfort today to insure personal privileges in the future?

"Will we make sacrifices and will we drive forward as a united team to create superior military force?

"And finally, will we fight in these forces when and where the need arises?

Protection Through Strength

"I am convinced that when foreign powers are made to realize by our actions as well as by our words that this Nation is united and determined to accomplish these objectives, then the dangers of war will lessen"

Gen. Drum declared unity within the country behind the Army must be coupled with cooperation between the Army and the people. The Army itself, he said, needs leadership, from top to bottom, and resourcefulness and some of the tradition inherited from the soldiers of the Revolution who made this Nation possible.

Tells of Past Maneuvers

The Army commander reviewed past maneuvers where "everything was improvised; all modern weapons except a few tanks were simulated" and traced development of the present First Army, nearly 400,000 strong and spread from Maine to Georgia, from a few incomplete units scattered along the Eastern Seaboard. That Army, he said, will plunge into maneuvers Monday morning, where all the hardships of war, except bullets, will be real and unceasing

Before his address, commanding generals of the First, Second and Sixth Corps, composing the First Army, and the Governors of North and South Carolina spoke.

Maj. Gen. Lloyd R. Fredendall, commanding the Second Corps, which includes the Twenty-ninth Division, said all commanders must regard the next two months as a "test of themselves and their men."

Warns of Hard Task

Maj. Gen. Charles F. Thompson, commanding the First Corps, reminded the officers and men that the maneuver will be "no lark;" that hard marshes, lack of sleep and "bivouac life" must be expected and that all of them would be weary and unkempt on occasions.

Maj. Gen. Karl Truesdell said the next two months "must be gainfully spent." The corps, he said, must concentrate on "celerity of movement, mental and physical; on battle tactics and first, last and always on leadership."

Gov. J. Melville Broughton of North Carolina declared. "Our hearts and our homes are open to the men of the First Army," and told of efforts to provide the men with recreation off duty.

Gov. Burnat R. Maybank of South Carolina assured the soldiers "the morale of our people is excellent," said that "if we are to survive, the foreign policy of Franklin D. Roosevelt must be carried through. If our children are to enjoy the privileges we have had, we must be prepared mentally, spiritually and physically to defend them."

Brig. Gen. Henry Tyrrell, jr., deputy director of maneuvers, outlined the umpire and control systems to be used. Music was furnished by the Field Artillery Band of the Ninth Division.

An insurance company will pay the reward to the cat with Mrs. Burdsall as trustee.

Sinking Spurs Neutrality Repeal

ships without specific authorization by Congress. He said he had given no thought to rivising combat zone delineations by Presidential order.

News of the torpedoing of the American-owned, Panama-registered tanker I. C. White off the coast of Brazil reached Washington after Mr. Roosevelt saw reporters and too late for comment by him.

But Congressional leaders predicted it would speed the movement to modify the act to lift restrictions on arming ships.

Representative Luther Johnson (Democrat), of Texas, ranking member of the House Foreign Relations Committee, said the sinking "further demonstrates the immediate need of permitting American merchant ships to be armed."

"The ship might have been saved if it had had guns to shoot back," said Johnson. "American lives were at stake in this case and if any have been lost the American people will be thoroughly aroused."

Senator Hill (Democrat), of Alabama, Senate majority whip, said the Germans apparently were determined to carry the war to this hemisphere and called the I. C. White sinking "another link" in a chain of events he said has already justified neutrality law revision.

Piracy Warning Recalled

"Another proof that the President's order to eliminate piracy from the high seas was timely," commented Senator Elbert Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. "Apparently a flag is no protection for a ship."

Indications from isolationist ranks were that the President faced a fight even on a limited revision of the law repealing only the armed ship ban. Noninterventionist view is that arming of merchantmen would increase their inability to attack and that transfer of registry forfeits the right of American protection.

The President's decision to confer only with Senate leaders on Tuesday, with Chairman Sol Bloom of the House Foreign Affairs Committee sitting in as observer, indicated the forthcoming revision would be moved first through the Senate, where the Administration commands its largest foreign policy majority.

Chairman Connally of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who hurried back from Chicago to keep an appointment with the President, disclosed that instead he will participate in the general conference Tuesday.

Besides Connally, who has already declared for lifting of armed merchantmen, combat zone and belligerent port entry restrictions, the conference probably will be attended by Vice President Wallace, Senate Majority Leader Barkley, Senate Minority Leader McNary, and Senator Austin (Republican), of Vermont.

Board Reports Plane Dispute Settlement

The Defense Mediation Board announced last night a settlement had been reached in a strike threat involving 27,000 workers at Consolidated Aircraft's San Diego, Calif., plant.

Details of the agreement were not made public. Board officials said a meeting of the International Association of Machinists Local (A. of F. L.), which originally called a strike for September 29, would be held Sunday to act on the proposal.

Company, union and board representatives have been negotiating the dispute for two days. Principal issue, board sources said, was the union demand for a blanket 10-cent-an-hour increase.

Outcome of Talks Awaited

The strike call was cancelled at the Mediation Board's request pending outcome of the conferences here.

The Mediation Board also announced settlement of a strike at the Mahwah, N. J., plant of the American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co., which had tied up delivery of shells and casings to the Navy.

Details of the agreement were not made public and are subject to approval or rejection by union members at a meeting to be arranged soon.

Members of the A. F. L. International Molders and Foundry Workers called a strike at the plant July 28 to support demands for wage increases and a union shop. On September 24, at the Mediation Board's request, the 440 employes returned to work pending outcome of the negotiations here.

Alabama Hearings Adjourned

The board's hearing started Wednesday.

Saying that it was unable to obtain an agreement between Alabama soft coal mine operators and the United Mine Workers (C. I. O.), the Mediation Board adjourned hearings on the case and announced it would make recommendations later. The dispute involves a demand for a 40-cent-a-day wage increase over the present $5.50 rate. About 22,500 miners are involved in the dispute.

Submission of another Alabama dispute to the Mediation Board resulted in an understanding by which members of a C. I. O. shipbuilding union went back to work. The union walked out Wednesday to back a demand for changes in and extension of an existing contract with the Alabama Drydock & Shipbuilding Co. plant at Mobile. Members voted to return to work pending consideration of the dispute by the Mediation Board.

O'Daniel Calls Gasoline Shortage Bogus; Moffett Sees Plot to Nationalize Industry

Petroleum Coordinator Ickes' gasoline conservation campaign was attacked on two fronts yesterday, with Senator O'Daniel (Democrat), of Texas, charging that the threatened shortage was a "manufactured emergency," and a California oil company executive intimating that it was part of a plot for Government operation of the oil industry.

O'Daniel, who has criticized a plan proposed by Ickes and the oil companies to build a 24-inch pipeline from Texas to New York, told reporters he was confident sufficient oil could be delivered by railroad tank car to offset a drain on East Coast supplies estimated at 175,000 barrels a day. He added that the pipeline might later be used to transport natural gas out of Texas, thus depriving the State of a valuable asset in its drive to obtain new industries.

The veiled charge that Ickes aspired to take over the petroleum industry was made in a press conference here by James A. Moffett, chairman of the board of the California-Texas Oil Co. and former Federal Housing administrator.

Moffett declared that an "authoritative source" advised him that the "British have offered and are anxious to return tankers" borrowed from the Gulf Coast-Atlantic Coast run last spring, and that Ickes refused to return the tankers to American service but diverted them instead to the Dutch East Indies, South America and Australia.

Moffett also claimed that the 175,000-barrel daily deficit was desired by oil companies who wished to reduce East Coast inventories now that their foreign oil trade had disappeared, and that even if there were a shortage, railroad tank cars, used efficiently, could relieve it and actually bring in additional amounts over and above daily consumption.

British Offer Denied

At the Petroleum Coordinator's Office, a spokesman categorically denied that the British had offered to return any American tankers, and pointed to recent testimony of Ickes before a Special Senate Investigating Committee that the probabilities were that the British would require even more vessels.

Moffett contended that in 1917, 57,000 oil tank cars transported 30,500,000 tons of petroleum products, whereas in 1940 there were 148,000 tank cars which moved only 60 million tons. There are, he said, two and six-tenths as many cars, but they are moving only twice as much oil. The implication he drew was that if the oil companies chose to utilize them, they could transport 80 million rather than 60 million tons, or more than enough to cover the deficit.

In recent testimony before the Senate Investigating Committee, however, J. J. Pelley, president of the American Association of Railroads, presented a table showing that of the 143,000 tank cars in 1940, only 105,801, or less than twice the 1917 number, were suitable for petroleum products, the rest being used for acids, milk, syrups, etc.

Moffett expressed confidence that the railroads could handle the problem if only oil companies would utilize the tank cars. He declared, however, that there was an impending shortage of oil on the West Coast, due to disproportionate diversion of tankers.

Asked why this shortage could not be met by tank cars, Moffett said the West Coast presented an "exceptional situation," with only single track lines available and that further use of tank cars would force the displacement of other traffic.

Professor Wants Papers to Answer For Untruths

By the Associated Press

A Harvard University faculty member advocated before the Federal Communications Commission yesterday a law which would make newspapers accountable in the courts for untrue statements.

C. J. Friedrich, Harvard professor of government, told the commission that such a law would provide "a system under which the better paper can defend itself against the unsatisfactory paper."

He testified at hearings by the commission to determine its future policy on newspaper applications for broadcasting licenses.

Questioned on that subect, Friedrich said he thought that "the more diversity the better" in ownership of means of communication and expressed the opinion that it would be "more democratic to have radio stations separate from newspapers."

President Appeals For Chest Funds

Willkie, Tom Smith Participate in Plea For Record Response

President Roosevelt asked the American people last night to "give more than ever before" to Community Chest and welfare funds and thus help build a "stronger and better America."

Broadcasting from the White House, he asserted that "we must build up not merely our Army and Navy, but we must build up the well-being of our civilian population."

The President spoke during a program in which Wendell L. Willkie and Tom K. Smith, head of the Mobilization for Human Needs, also participated.

Asserting that Americans had a "profound faith in freedom," Willkie, speaking from the C. B. S. Studio in New York, said "but if we take this position, that we are going to stand for freedom, then we must also see to it that, under our free system, misery and suffering are eliminated, so far as this is humanly possible.

By giving to those who have too little, you will be defending America just as surely as if you were engaged in the manufacture of armaments. For by your giving you will demonstrate that under a free system, men and women are not abandoned to suffering and social neglect or forced to become wards of an all-powerful state. That under a free franchise we are in reality fellow citizens.

"So we make democracy real at home. And that is essential to making it strong in the world."

The President's text:

Straightforward Appeal

Once more I am making a straightforward, simple appeal to the people of our country to support a great annual event—the Community Mobilization for Human Needs. Most of you do not recognize this name, but it represents the tying together of hundreds of local community efforts known as "Community Chests" or "community funds" or "welfare drives." These represent consolidations of many thousands of local charities run by churches, social welfare organizations, health associations and many others.

The American people have given generously in the past—very generously.

But this year I hope the American people will give more than ever before.

That is because, in a great world threat to our future, we must, for ourselves and our country, preserve and make secure our values and the strength of our institutions.

Employment Sets Record

It is true that more people are at work in our land today than ever before. It is true that our national income is rising. But it is still true that millions of our fellow citizens are still undernourished, ill clad and poorly housed. Bad health maims too many of our American households.

We must build up, not merely our Army and our Navy, but we must build up the well-being of our civilian population.

In past years we have done this through a great humanitarian revival. This year we must do it for the added reason that adequate national defense definitely needs it.

Once more I point out to you that the Federal Government cannot and ought not to try to cover the whole field of social service. Private agencies in every locality are essential not only for the good of the sick and the children and the mothers and the poor, but they are of the utmost importance in instilling charity or greater love of our fellow beings in the hearts of all of us as individuals.

We can afford to be better neighbors to our neighbors. We can afford to give support to those noble men and women whose lives are devoted to the help of their fellows.

It would be a calamity for the Nation and its future if private charity did not exist and grow. That is why I am asking each and every individual in every town and village and on every farm to contribute something, large or small, toward this great and proven service. You will be helping to build a stronger and better America. When I have said that I have said all that is necessary, for it is a spiritual as well as a practical appeal to the better natures of my fellow citizens.

Check Charge Laid Against Vanderbilt Kin

New York, Oct. 3 (AP).—Jacob L. Webb, great-great-grandson of Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt who set cafe society astir by eloping with Lenore Lemmon last Monday, was arrested today on a complaint charging him with issuing worthless checks.

WEBB

He was arrested in his suite at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria on a complaint from the Hotel Pierre who charged Webb with issuing two checks, for $20 and $100, to the hotel last April, and said they were returned marked "No account."

When detectives told him what they wanted, his bride, the daughter of a New York ticket broker, called to him: "Where are you going?"

Webb replied: "To get a ticket for the ball game this afternoon."

Arraigned in court, Webb had $200 in cash sent to him by a friend and offered to make immediate restitution, but Magistrate William A. Farrell said the payment would have no outcome on the case and refused to dismiss the complaint.

Webb was granted an adjournment until Monday.

The Webbs were married at Moncks Corner, S. C., last Sunday after eloping from New York.

Peace to End Priority Rule, Bankers Told

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 3.—A Government official today told the Mortgage Bankers Association of America that Federal controls would be relaxed after the war while an industrial spokesman said that already "the American Republic, still commonly called a democracy, has disappeared and has been replaced by a statocracy."

Charles F. Palmer, Coordinator of Defense Housing, told the bankers to expect curtailment of business by priorities during the war, "because it will bring us closer to victory and that is all it is for."

Blames Hitler

"Hitler's attack on civilization may be forcing us to accept a lot more regimentation than anybody wants, because regimentation is necessary to win the war, but if anyone thinks the American people, or the Administration, will go on after the war trying to run a priority system just for the fun of it, they have simply been taken in by isolationist propaganda," Palmer said.

Virgil Jordan, president of the National Industrial Conference Board, predicted American entry into the war by next March, with blockade, bombardment and invasion of Western Europe.

With actual hostilities, Jordan said, the American Republic would have virtually disappeared.

"The state is now, and has been for a decade, engaged in a systematic process both of confiscating private property for its own use and redistributing it among its dependents and adherents in the community," Jordan asserted.

Likened to New Order

"It should be recognized that this organic alteration of the former American economic system has been carried along precisely the same lines as those which the surgeons of the new order in Europe have followed," he continued.

Frederick P. Champ, head of the Utah Mortgage Loan Corporation, and Cache Valley Banking Co., of Logan, Utah, was elected president of the association, succeeding Dean R. Hill, of Buffalo, N. Y.

Charles A. Mullenix, of Cleveland, Ohio, was elected vice president. Four new regional vice presidents elected were Harold G. Woodruff, Detroit; L. E. Mahan, St. Louis; Wallace Moir, Los Angeles, and John C. Thompson, Newark, N. J.

New York governors elected included Thompson, Charles H. Sill, Detroit; Joseph M. Miller, New Orleans; W. L. King, Washington; Frank H. Wolff, San Antonio; Frank L. Wilkinson, Kansas City, and W. Eugene Harrington, Atlanta.

New Head of Bar Association Urges Support of U. S. Policy

By the Associated Press

Indianapolis, Oct. 3.—With election of Walter P. Armstrong, 57, of Memphis, as president and selection of Detroit for next year's meeting, the American Bar Association closed its sixty-fourth annual convention this afternoon on a keynote, voiced by its new head, of support for "the decisions of our Government."

"The forces against which we are arrayed," Armstrong told the convention after his installation, "are, for the present at least, disciplined forces moving with insensate and almost insane fury to the will of one man."

The association re-elected Secretary Harry S. Knight, of Sunbury, Pa., and Treasurer John H. Voorhees, of Sioux Falls, S. D., and named Guy R. Crump, of Los Angeles, as chairman of the house of delegates. All were unopposed.

Armstrong, a Yale classmate of Justice Stanley Reed, succeeds Jacob H. Lashly of St. Louis. The new president was born at Pittsboro, Miss., and has practiced law in Memphis since 1908.

Odlum Likens Idle Resources To 5th Column

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Oct. 3.—Declaring that "every idle tool, every idle man, every idle factory is . . . an economic fifth columnist," Floyd B. Odlum, head of the OPM Contract Distribution Division, tonight called on large defense manufacturers to spread their work to prevent "the economic and social catastrophe" that would follow shutdowns of small plants.

Speaking over a national radio hookup, Odlum declared that some of the "comparatively few large plants" now holding the bulk of defense orders will take until 1943 to complete work on their contracts, but at the same time, thousands and thousands of smaller manufacturing plants are idle or face that early prospect."

Many of these smaller factories, he said, can and must participate in the defense program, because although material to be delivered in 1943 may be useful then, "delivery of this material now may spell the difference between victory and defeat in the battlefields of the Near East, China and the Ukraine."

"Indeed," he continued, "by delivering the goods today it may be unnecessary to produce them tomorrow . . .

"You can be certain that there are no usable idle plants in Germany."

Warning that disruptions were inevitable during the period of shifting civilian factories to defense work, and admitting that there are not enough raw materials to go around, Odlum said the distress could be minimized by a wider distribution of defense contracts.

He indicated that he would soon seek legislation to eliminate the necessity for competitive bidding in some cases and to remove other "legal obstances" to the program of widespread diffusion of contracts.

Company Official Gives Up in Killing Of Labor Leader

New York, Oct. 3 (AP).—Salvatore Sabbatino, wealthy vice president of a stevedoring company who was sought in the slaying yesterday of Union Labor Leader Emil Camarda, surrendered today.

Camarda, 56, general vice president for the Atlantic Coast district of the International Longshoremen's Association (A. F. L.), was shot and killed in Sabbatino's private offices in a quarrel over the number of Irish employes in Sabbatino's work crews.

No charges were filed immediately against Sabbatino.

Yesterday afternoon Camarda asked Sabbatino to employ a friend and an argument started.

"Why do you put all those Irish to work?" police quoted Sabbatino as demanding. "Why can't you make room for some Italians?"

"TAKE MY LIFE AND LET IT BE"
FRANCES R. HAVERGAL

Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to thee.
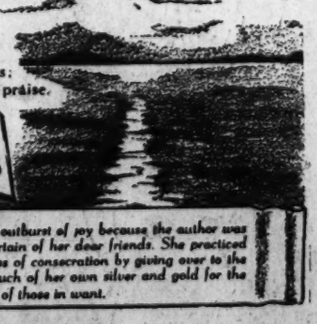
Take my moments and my days;
Let them flow in ceaseless praise.



This piece was written in an outburst of joy because the author was instrumental in converting certain of her dear friends. She practiced its message of the gloriousness of consecration by giving over to the Church Missionary House much of her own silver and gold for the benefit of those in want.

'One Foot in Heaven' Pays Tribute to the Pulpit

Fredric March and Martha Scott Bring Distinction to New Film at the Earle; Stage Revue Owes Debt to the Roxyettes

EVEN THOSE WHOSE ORTHODOXY has been smudged by the consciousness of backsliding should not be deterred from enjoying "One Foot in Heaven" by the fear that it may convert the screen into a pulpit of evangelical zeal. There is nothing preachy about this film story of the life of a Methodist preacher.

Emphatically and happily to the contrary, Scenarist Casey Robinson has translated Hartzell Spence's biography of a "practical parson"—who happened to be his ministerial father—into a camera drama that is humorous, deeply and sympathetically human, interesting and inspiringly entertaining.

In executing this tour of realism, he has rendered a distinct service to both the theater and the church. He has discerned that men of the cloth are not so much sanctimonious instruments of repression as they are understanding and warmly human beings whose godliness expresses itself in kindly tolerance of everything in life but the viciously evil. His study of the family of a circuit pastor, shortly after the turn of the century, is a tale of courage, sacrifice, heroic fortitude and abounding humor. Into its warp and woof have been woven all of the homely threads of everyday American life, with less emphasis upon its hardships than upon its ultimate glories.

A Life of Trial and Triumph

William Spence was a young medical student who "got religion" in a revival revelation and married his gently reared Canadian bride into the squalor of a rickety Iowa parsonage in 1904. Their life for the next 20 years is a succession of migrations from one pastorate to another, each with its domestic, financial and social problems. These the minister meets with an ingenuity and ethical elasticity not always attributed to the clergy.

He tricks his wife in the naming of their youngest child, watches his house burn down while the fireman devote their energies to saving their firehouse next door, devises shrewd means of raising the money with which to buy food for his family and succumbs to the "movies" while attending a "Bill" Hart picture to point out its evils to his son. His final triumph is achieved when he rescues his church from the clutches of the moneyed clique and transforms it from a nest of smug hypocrisy into a rallying point for the lowliest as well as the highest in the community.

He does all this not as a hard-shelled religionist, but as a red-blooded American who sees life through clear eyes. No one can elude the inspiration and enlivening entertainment to be found in the parson's shaping of things to the way of the Lord.

Excellently Played by Notable Cast

The costellar roles in "One Foot in Heaven" are superlatively well played by Fredric March and Martha Scott. Mr. March is a vigorous and forthright minister of the gospel who perceives the fundamental functions of his calling, but none of its "holier-than-thou" affectations. He is the kind of person any son would be proud to have for a father—just as Hartzell Spence is so obviously proud of his. Miss Scott, as the patient, steadfast wife, understands her husband as thoroughly as Mrs. Day hers, in "Life With Father," and anticipates his moods and his intentions as completely. Together they draw a solid picture of difficult home life which they somehow contrive to make supremely happy, if not easy.

Among the supporting players, Gene Lockhart, Beulah Bondi, Moroni Olsen, Laura Hope Crews and Harry Davenport are foremost in fashioning the trials, tribulations and triumphs of the parsonage. Elisabeth Fraser and Frankie Thomas do particular justice to the more prominent of the many juvenile roles. None in the cast fails to do his full part. In directing the picture, Irving Rapper has laid heavy stress upon the power of simplicity and, at times, a little too much upon speed of movement. He has not turned out a film of stupendous physical proportions. He has merely made an extremely good one.

Roxyettes Provide Color on Stage

Thanks principally to the Roxyettes, the stage revue at the Earle this week is colorful, although thoroughly undistinguished. Toy and Wing, Oriental dancers in the American manner, offer a conventional exposition of China's conception of ballroom grace and swing jitterbugging and the Whitson Brothers present a hazardous sort of Risley acrobatics at high speed and at the apparent risk of their necks. Those usually irresistible youthful harmonists, The Martins—with a slight revision of personnel—yesterday seemed not quite so potent as heretofore in their clever song arrangements.

The new issue of Paramount News, with the high spots of the first World Series game, is the only screen auxiliary of a feature that was cheered at its finish at Thursday night's world premiere and enthusiastically applauded yesterday by an audience that overflowed the capacity of the house.

Metropolitan Now-Made Gay By Four-Star 'Navy Blues'

When Ann Sheridan and Martha Raye and all those gobs sing and march to those "Navy Blues,"—it'll get you, no matter if you're a pacifist, a centenarian, a conchie or just think international fighting is a preposterous tragedy. It's an unfair attack on your emotions, that's what it is. But what with the battlewagons, the deep blue sea, Ann Sheridan's fancy strut and the ringing swing of the "Navy Blues," you'll love it in its renewed run at the Metropolitan.

Taking Jack Oakie and Jack Haley for samples, the Navy lads are ba-a-ad boys. But you have to consider that they're coping with Martha Raye, who's no cream puff, not to mention Jack Carson, the big bounder. Perpetual bankruptcy, too, plays a part in their misdoings. Reduced to mooching pretzels and nickels, they run across a get-rich-quick betting scheme. To finance it they "borrow" the ship's trophy cups and pawn them. You can imagine the terrible things that happen to them after that sacrilegious act.

Martha Raye fares better than Ann Sheridan in chores awarded her. Not that La Sheridan isn't as enthalling as always, doesn't live up to all opportunities—but her abilities deserve a wider scope. She's naturally a topflight star on the scores of beauty, acting ability and warmth of temperament. Ebullient Martha Raye is up to everything, has tremendous fracases with Oakie and Haley. The prize lark comes when she has to be bundled into a sea bag to conceal her presence aboard ship. She escapes from this predicament only after a phony fire alarm, a slide down a laundry chute and a ride in a garbage can!

Photomontages of mingled battleships, waves, guns, sailors and other deep-sea memorabilia are nothing less than superb. They set the key perfectly for naval adventure.

"Snow Time For Comedy" is the color cartoon. It shows two skiing and skating pups in chase of a bone which takes on the aspect of a fata morgana.

MARY HARRIS.

Star in Film of Unusual Text

MARTHA SCOTT AND FREDRIC MARCH who bring deep human appeal to the roles of the Spartan wife and the "practical parson," respectively, in the Warner Brothers picturization of Hartzell Spence's "One Foot in Heaven," now on view at the Earle Theater. Beulah Bondi, Gene Lockhart, Laura Hope Crews and many others of note appear in the long supporting cast

HEDDA HOPPER

No Apple for Teacher

Hollywood, Calif., Oct. 3.—School teachers all over the country have the profound sympathy of Claudette Colbert, who's playing one of them in "Remember the Day." Claudette tells me that in all her years on stage and screen she never felt so self-conscious as the first day she stepped before her studio classroom.

CLAUDETTE COLBERT

Says she: "The way those kids looked at me completely floored me. And I had a director to help control them and dialogue written for me. If I hadn't, that woman you'd have seen going over the top of the hill would have been Claudette Colbert."

Virginia Sale got her first road show off to a good start last Friday night in Glendale before 500 aviation students and mechanics. It's the well-known three-act Broadway comedy success, "The Patsy," with Marie Wilson heading a volunteer cast of seven and Virginias h'usband, Sam Wren, directing. They'll do a tour of 40 one-nighters throughout West Coast camps.

When Lupe Velez kept tugging at her hose between scenes on "Honolulu Lu," she explained: "If I don't hold up my stockings, I hold up production." And you should get a load of the earrings, bracelet and pin she helped her jewelers design. They are solid gold with about 40 diamonds clustering a hunk of rubies. She'll premier them in the picture . . . Orson Welles has adopted a 6-year-old English girl, a war orphan named Veronica Fitzgibbon, for support until she finds a home.

Preston Foster's trying to sell his Beverly Hills home so he can retire up into his Bouquet Canyon ranch to live . . . Gary Cooper, one of Hollywood's crack marksmen, has to pretend he's never held a gun before in "Ball of Fire." That'll really take acting . . . George Stevens heard Jack Carr heckling the umpire at a baseball game, signed him to heckle Katharine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy in "Woman of the Year," then discovered he was John E. Emmett Carr, the old-timer from the New York stage.

Cecil B. DeMille, who has put plenty of people in the bathtub, goes underwater himself for final technical scenes of "Reap the Wild Wind." He's going to have the biggest bathtub on earth. It'll be the Pacific Ocean. The Maestro dons a diving suit and goes under the brine to direct submarine action between a couple of stunt men, off Catalina. He's been rehearsing in a specially built tank at Malibu, a telephone connecting him with the actors. Other day a couple of photographers wanted stills of him when he was 25 feet under. "O. K.," said DeMille, "Come on down and get 'em. And they did."

With all the complaints going on, it's nice to hear Director Al Hall's gratitude for his good luck. All in one month he marries the girl of his choice, his picture, "Here Comes Mr. Jordan," is a sensation and he gets to look at Loretta Young all day long in "Bedtime Story"—and gets paid for it!

In "Song of the Islands," it'll be John Payne's turn to climb into a sarong for benefit of female audiences.

LEONARD LYONS

Broadway Nocturne

New York, Oct. 3.

11 P. M. "An organization is being set up, to prepare for the campaign against Representative Hamilton Fish," an upstate leader informs at Fefe's Beach Club. "The man who will run against Fish may be Warden Lawes" . . . "Tex Reiber, who resigned as head of Texaco last year, is returning to big-business," an industrialist states at Toots Shor's. "Reiber is being elected head of a large cement company, this week"... "The entire Senate subcommittee investigating movie propaganda attended the Washington showing of the new picture, 'One Foot in Heaven,' on Thursday night," a publicist declares at Jack Dempsey's. "It's propaganda—for God" . . . "If you want a good story," an editor advises at the Tavern, "find out what the mysterious Ben Smith has been doing in Mexico. He just came back."

GROUCHO MARX

12 P. M. "I planted 6000 pine trees on my Bucks County Farm," Moss Hart confides at Sardi's, "and now they almost hide the place from view. I'm going to call the place 'Cherchez La Farm'" . . . "I just left Groucho Marx," a producer reports at the Havana-Madrid. "He refuses to visit any night clubs. When I told him: But you'll meet all those interesting people,' Groucho said: I'd rather retire early—and dream about them.'"

1 A. M. "Hollywood, Hollywood," Lou Holtz laments at the Versailles "Every Sunday afternoon, I'd go to this big producer's home, and 75 guests always were invited. Then he and I would sit down to play two-handed pinochle. Immediately, the 74 other guests would move to the other side of the room and stand behind the producer" . . . "In her new mystery book, Gypsy Rose Lee reveals the first secret of Burlesque attire," a stripper informs at Leon & Eddie's. "Gypsy says she wears something long enough to keep the police away and, yet short enough to lure the customers in."

2 A. M. "An Axis statesman will be the guest speaker at the Overseas Press Club here on Wednesday," a member reveals at the Wivel Club. "He's Kasai, of the Japanese Diet. While he speaks, the club's doors will be closed to all but members, and the waiters sent home" . . . "Harold Moskovit, head of the Affiliated Young Democrats, visited his friend, Supreme Court Justice Robert Jackson, in Washington," a lwayer relates at Leone's. "He addressed Jackson as 'Judge,' and corrected himself: 'Mr. Justice,' and then asked: 'Just what is the proper way of addressing you?' The jurist replied:: 'The correct way is to call me Bob'" . . . "Clare Boothe, who began to write a book about China, is bogged down in the job," a reporter states at the Casino Russe. "Clare says that China is just too big to lick by pen or sword—because she's still 50,000 words away from the final chapter."

3 A. M. "Here's a Berlin newspaper clipping I got from one of the passengers on the 'Navemar,'" a customs official exhibits at the Swing Club. The clipping—an obituary notice—reads: "Sadly we announce that our son, Hans, was killed in the campaign in Greece. He was our sixth son to die for the Fuehrer and the Fatherland. This Was the Glorious Day For Which We Had Brought Him Up" . . . "When George Bernard Shaw's biographer saw him after many years," a Britisher relates at the Mayan, "he told G. B.: 'You haven't changed much. The last time I saw you your face was white and your hair was red. Now your hair is white and your face is red.'"

4 A. M. "I almost became a prizefighter," Paul Robeson confides at Cafe Society Uptown. "When I was playing pro football, they wanted to match me with Harry Wills or Jack Dempsey. If I had known there'd be such gates as the Louis-Nova one, I'd have made fighting my profession" . . . Mickey Alpert, who once helped support Joe Frisco, sees him entertain at La Martinique and offers him a job in a Boston cafe. "I'm w-w-way up there n-n-now," Frisco haughtily replies, after two weeks' work. "You can't p-p-pay me enough" . . . At the dark Copacabana, agent Irving Lazar places a contract for signature, before proprietor Monte Proser. "I lost the Beachcomber, the Madison Square Garden dance-place and two others—because I signed contracts without looking at 'em," Proser declares, and then signs—without reading the contract.

5 A. M. "Not only inventions, but also psychologic stunts for defense purposes, are within the jurisdiction of the National Inventors Council," a playwright informs at Dave's Blue Room. "Charlie MacArthur submitted an idea which is being considered by the Council" . . . "After 20 years, Pepino, the South American, no longer lives with me," John Perona, El Morocco proprietor, states at Reuben's. "While he was out to lunch, I moved to a smaller apartment, and took all my furniture with me" . . . "Last spring, Dr. Milton S. Blum, psychology professor at C. C. N. Y., was hired by BMI to discover the cause of song popularity in radio," a songwriter relates. "He had to listen to five programs at one time, every day, during the summer. A few days ago he returned to his college classes, told the students about his experiments, and they asked him what was the result. 'I've cone to one conclusion,' the prof answered, 'Now—I'm a jitterbug.'"

Two special A. P. football wires have been added to the regular service of the Associated Press and The Post's other wire services. In addition to publishing a listing of scores from practically every college football game in the country, The Post is able—since it has the only eight-page sports section—to give individual reports of more games than any other Washington paper on Sunday morning. These stories come to Post readers from the top sports writers of the Associated Press, United Press, International News Service and New York Tribune service, as well as The Post's own sports staff. Add to this news coverage the Wirephoto and Post staff pictures, and columns by Povich, Considine, and Cunningham. You can see why fans in the Washington area agree that it's The Washington Post for sports!

NOW The Washington Post goes up to eight full pages of sports on Sunday . . . adding still another reason why you will find that The Sunday Post is Washington's most complete, most entertaining, most fascinating Sunday newspaper.

Most complete news in The Sunday Post, of course, for only The Post, in Washington, covers the world with the reporters of FIVE news services. More pictures in The Sunday Post, not only with Post staff photos and Wirephoto pictures throughout the paper, but also in The Sunday Post's TWO picture sections—The Post's own eight-page rotogravure, and the new 32-page picture-magazine section, Parade.

More variety of subjects, with something for everyone's interests, in The Sunday Post. Only The Sunday Post has ELEVEN sections; only The Sunday Post offers its readers a complete novel.

Quixotic Pact

Advance reports of the terms of the agreement about to be concluded between Mexico and the United States have brought a good many protests from disinterested as well as interested quarters. Hemispheric defense needs, to be sure, take precedence over all other considerations. Still it is open to ask whether it is wise for the United States to deal quixotically with a country that has repeatedly deprived American investors of their property without providing adequate compensation. To advance funds to Mexico and then to permit that government to return a part of the advance as a "token payment" to despoiled American oil companies would certainly be to indulge in a rather absurd proceeding. If we could be sure that it would endear us to the Mexicans and make them more zealous hereafter to respect the property rights of our citizens, such quixotic generosity might be justified. But there is a real danger that it would be interpreted as a sign of weakness leading to further attacks in the future.

Mexico, it is true, is at present unable to make the prompt and adequate compensation for the seized oil properties which is required, as Secretary Hull has stated, to make expropriation legal. But it would be quite feasible to extend aid to Mexico for mutual defense purposes without inferentially recognizing the validity of the oil property seizures by acceptance of token payments. That would leave the question of settlement open for later negotiation between the companies and the Mexican government, and would entail no surrender of the principles enunciated by Secretary Hull on previous occasions. A firm insistence upon the rights of our citizens to be protected against spoliation under the rules of international law would not only be some protection against a repetition of acts of seizure by Mexico but it would also serve as a warning to other Latin-American countries not to follow Mexico's example.

Test For The NDMB

Senator Styles Bridges is not the first to take note of the dilemma which looms up before the National Defense Mediation Board, though he expresses the dilemma in too-violent language. Several other observers have directed attention to the importance of the dispute dropped into the lap of the board by the United Mine Workers and the steel companies operating "captive" coal mines to supply their own fuel needs. John L. Lewis is demanding a union shop for 43,000 workers in the "captive" mines. The steel companies refuse to make any such concession, fearing no doubt that a union shop for their employes supplying fuel would be a first step toward a union shop in the steel mills also. Obviously a prolonged struggle between the two would reduce the production of steel for war supplies, even if it didn't lead to a general coal strike in the Appalachian area. So the Mediation Board will have to continue wrestling with the issue and will probably have to decide whether or not its influence shall be used to extend the closed shop in the present emergency.

In the first World War the same problem was met by a declaration of policy by the War Labor Board which deplored any change in the status quo so far as closed and open shops were concerned. In effect both employers and employes were asked to refrain from taking advantage of the war to press for changes in these relationships. The NDMB would be in a much stronger position today if it had taken a similar stand. Even in the absence of such an advance declaration of principles, however, it can wield a constructive influence by asking unions to postpone demands for the closed shop where the closed shop does not already exist, and employers to refrain from attempting to break down any closed-shop agreement now in force.

The dangers of using governmental influence to extend the closed shop in wartime or its equivalent are fully apparent. As a matter of principle the Government ought not to compel citizens to join a private organization in order to serve their country in a crisis. Probably more important is the danger that a clear-cut precedent approving extension of the closed shop would lead to many strikes by unions seeking that bargaining advantage. The Mediation Board appears to have taken note of this danger in refusing to approve the closed-shop demands of an A. F. of L. union in the Aluminum Co. case. It has set no precedent that calls for support of John L. Lewis' unreasonable demands now before it. The national interest will best be served if the board's recommendations in this case are so clear-cut that demands for a union shop where none exists will not again be pressed during the emergency. To this extent we agree with Senator Bridges' case.

Undoing A Law

Events have justified the case which Senator Pepper put before the Senate on Thursday on the neutrality law. Under this law the restraints upon American shipping are applicable whenever the President by proclamation shall find "that there exists a state of war between foreign states, and that it is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States." Here are two conditions precedent for proclaiming the restraints. Certainly the first condition—that a state of war existed—justified the proclamation which made most of the waters of the eastern Atlantic unavailable to American shipping. What, however, of the second condition? Has the security or the peace of the United States been served by this restraint? The verdict of events is that it hasn't. The struggle of half of Europe against the march of Hitlerism was tepid because those countries felt that with the United States locked up in the New World there could be no successful challenge to Hitler. Thus Hitler came into possession of the very approaches to our hemisphere without much trouble. There can be no doubt that our security and our peace, therefore, have actually been threatened by the restraints imposed by the neutrality proclamation.

For ourselves we have hitherto felt that a straightforward repeal of the neutrality law is preferable to either amendment or nullification. But the problem is tactical. The commonest error of statesmanship which, according to Lord Salisbury, is to stick to the carcasses of dead policies, is often accounted a virtue by many of our legislators. And it is by no means certain that a repealer would get the majority that would make it a contribution instead of a handicap to our anti-Hitler policy. Thus there may be some justification for Senator Pepper's way out. An argument in favor of it, aside from the one that authority under the Neutrality Act is discretionary with the President, is that Congress itself would still reserve the power to bring the restraints back into operation. For the law gives the authority equally with the President to decide by concurrent resolution whether to invoke the statute.

Approach To Stalin

President Roosevelt's explanation of his remarks on the Soviet Union put the original reference in a somewhat different light. It now appears that he was expressing a "hope" that an "opening wedge" of religious freedom had been driven into Russia. The hope arose out of the Polish Ambassador's statement that such freedom had been assured to those Polish soldiers who have enlisted in the Russian army for service against Hitler's Germany. Now there seems to be a concerted effort to persuade Moscow to make at least this freedom general throughout a country in which the word of Josef Stalin is law.

There can be no scoffing at any attempt to extend freedom of religious worship. The problem is how, in the terra incognita which is Russia, we are to recognize the establishment of religious liberty. Formally this is already granted under Article 124 of the Soviet constitution, but the guaranty hitherto has been as worthless as any other guaranty in Russia's "fundamental law." The same worthlessness would be attached to any fresh proclamation which the man in the Kremlin might issue for the purpose of stressing Article 124. If Stalin won't let our observers go to his main theaters of war, he would certainly not allow any prying to be done by investigators bent upon seeing that religious freedom is a reality.

Freedom of any sort is intolerable in the Soviet Union in the very nature of the Stalinist system. The system on its face is democratic. There are Soviets or councils, local and national, and every Russian ostensibly has a right to make his voice heard. But the real rulers of Russia are the members of the Communist Party—the only political party, which in Russia is held together and ruled with an iron hand by the general secretary, Josef Stalin. Conflicts between the Soviets and the Communist Party are on paper resolved by the collective decision of the Soviets. But in practice the Soviets are boss-controlled by the Communists. Thus the system is so far removed from Communism or Marxism that it is really a dictatorship over the proletariat. We know from experience how strict is the discipline within the Communist Party. The fate of opposition elements within the Communist Party (who, according to Soviet law, are still citizens and cannot be imprisoned, deported, or executed without a public trial before a Soviet tribunal) is an eloquent and irrefutable sign of the absence of genuine workers' democracy.

Thus nothing is what it seems in Soviet Russia. But the internal mechanism of that country has absolutely nothing to do with the question of our aid to Russia. Russia is fighting for her own existence, but in the process she is doing the mightiest job of any country in laying a menace which, as the terror all over continental Europe shows, is aimed at subjugating the entire world. This is the title that Russia has upon our aid. It is regarded as a valid one by the American people. What the President is thinking of, perhaps, is that any effort is worth while which will bring such changes in Russia as will enable that country to cooperate on amicable terms with the rest of the world after the war.

Appeal To The Banks

Secretary Morgenthau in his address to the American Bankers Association stressed the important role that banks can play in furthering the defense effort by selective control over credit. It is, indeed, an important role, though the role may now seem odd to the layman. The public fully realizes the indispensability of bank credit to finance business concerns engaged in producing goods for the defense program. But it is rather a new idea to many people to be told that the banks can aid defense by refusing loans as well as by granting them. However, as Mr. Morgenthau points out, the banks can give invaluable aid to priorities officials by withholding loans from would-be borrowers seeking money to finance nondefense projects that would entail competition for strategic defense materials such as steel, copper, etc. Until the priorities system is much more effective and inclusive than is now the case, voluntary banking cooperation is, indeed, essential to prevent the Nation's credit resources from being used to divert labor and materials required for our defense effort to less essential uses.

The banks have already rendered yeoman service of a positive nature to the cause of defense by extending loans to defense producers and suppliers. A study published in the September Federal Reserve Bulletin indicates that a very large percentage of the increase in commercial loans during the past year has been due to defense borrowing. The funds are being used to furnish working capital and new plant facilities. Furthermore, as the Reserve Board points out, the extent of the aid afforded the Government by the banks is not adequately brought out by looking merely at the volume of defense loans. For it is the small and medium sized businesses which are especially dependent upon the banks to supply needed funds. Loan expansion based upon satisfaction of such needs is absolutely essential. But, by that same token, other loans should be scrutinized with great care in order to prevent a disastrous expansion of bank credit that would impair our defense efforts and bring about inflation. Of course, the fight against inflation has to be fought on many fronts, as Mr. Morgenthau was careful to point out in his address. But by setting an example of restraint in lending and by unselfishly aiding the Treasury's efforts to place Government bonds with individual investors, the banks can perform invaluable services in the struggle to avert the evils of an uncontrollable price rise.

A Housewife's Job

Figures of draft rejections startled the Nation into a renewed interest in the rehabilitation of our national health. Evidently much of our young manhood has been needlessly running on half its cylinders. As part of the new education, housewives are urged to study nutrition and insist that husbands and children get necessary exercise and medical attention. Such vigilance in looking after the family's health is not only a contribution to defense; it also pays dividends in family happiness. Housewives are encouraged to challenge two ogres with vitamins—domestic discontent and national physical weakness.

Now a third incentive for physical rehabilitation has come from Hollywood. Radiant health is the make-up cue for 1941. Producers of the movie, "Belle Starr," portraying the bandit beauty queen of the old South, say that this heroine was withered at 30. Not so the modern glamour girl, who is more beautiful at 35 than at 18. The explanation, according to Hollywood, lies in the modern woman's consumption of meals containing the right vitamins and in her new habit of dressing and resting sensibly. We need all these goads to help us recapture a national health which the rejectees showed has been in process of erosion.

HORIZON

The empty road companioned field on field;
The moon
Leaped from the hills of dusk to plains of sky.
Far across the reedy marsh a loon
Breathed his sharp evening sigh.
And out upon this wide grey disk,
Under the rounding lid,
I said I would ride the narrowing road
Out to the end. I did.
But the lid swung down before me then,
And I traveled the same road back again.

World Day For Animals

Would we not have a happier world in which to live if each one would but try to be a little kinder—not merely to be kind to one's own loved ones but to every living creature, human and animal?

This thought is inspired by World Day for Animals which is observed October 4 in almost every country in the world. This day has been dedicated to St. Francis of Assisi, patron saint of animals, whose compassion and kindness to animals were such as to set him apart from other men and women of his time. St. Francis ever sought to befriend animals, and called them "our little brothers." Many beautiful stories are told of St. Francis' efforts in behalf of animals and of how they in turn loved and protected him.

In observing World Day for Animals it seems fitting that we should reflect upon the debt which humanity owes the animal kingdom. The loyalty and devotion of animal pets are axiomatic, and almost everyone finds a responsive love in his heart for a faithful dog, horse, or cat. The contribution made by animals to the comfort and happiness of daily life is all too often taken for granted. We may even think that "that's what animals are for." We are prone to forget that from the lowest to the highest animal there is the instinct for self-preservation, and that animals also suffer pain as keenly as does man.

Ancient stories and fables tell of terrible monsters who exacted of humanity tribute in the form of beautiful young girls and young men to be used for food. To the helpless animal world, man, indeed, must be just such a monster.

Millions of animal creatures are slaughtered each year for food, clothing, and even for the "sport" of killing. The hunting season in many States is about to begin. Thousands of birds, deer, antelope and other animals will be killed and many others wounded, some to die painful, fever-ridden deaths. Then, too, there is the vivisectionist, who in the name of science subjects animals to unspeakable cruelties. All these things man does, and stops not to reflect upon the ruthlessness of his behavior. But on World Day for Animals may we not resolve to be a little more like the compassionate St. Francis, who was ever kind to "even these little ones."

America's Munichmen

Rarely in history has a myth ever been so rapidly and thoroughly pulverized as the Munich promise of September 30, 1938, that it had brought "peace for our time."

Munich was a cold-blooded, calculated plot of murder and treachery. It was engineered by Chamberlain-Daladier (in collaboration with the world's Nazi-Fascist-capitalists) who turned Europe over to Hitler as the price for a Nazi attack on the Soviet Union. The heart and soul of Munich was this philosophy that a bargain can be made with Hitler against the U. S. S. R.

What the "clever" architects of Munich betrayal could not see—although the Soviet government repeatedly warned them of it—was that the power which they placed in Hitler's hands could be turned against themselves. In bargaining with Hitler, they became victims of Hitler.

Events swiftly proved that Munich was not only a betrayal of Czecho-Slovakia. It was a betrayal of 28 nations in Europe including France. It brought Britain to the brink of disaster, and placed the United States in the greatest jeopardy in a century!

But Munichism is far from dead. Let us, who are still free men, forever guard against our own Munichmen, against such men, for instance, as Lindbergh, Wheeler, Hoover, Ham Fish.

Excess Profits Tax

I have today written to Secretary of Treasury Morgenthau protesting against his proposed 100 per cent taxation of any profits of corporations that exceed 6 per cent of invested capital. I believe many small businesses would be ruined by such tax. Small enterprises depend on energetic use of limited capital. Frequently these small-capital investments must be turned over many times in the course of the year. The result of a very modest gain on each turnover of capital may be a high percentage of the little man's precious capital at risk, and yet a small sum in dollars. If all of that modest sum in excess of 6 per cent on the small capital is to be taxed away, little enterprises cannot survive. The small manufacturer has his troubles holding his own at present. The Secretary's proposal would add to the small man's perplexities. It would place premium on waste and unwarranted costs. Plants would be unduly expanded and salaries improperly increased to avoid tax. Pay rolls would be augmented. Duplicate positions for friends and poor relatives would be set up. There would be discouragement of efficiency and no rewards for watchfulness. Also, millions of stockholders would be adversely affected by the Secretary's proposal. Finally, under the Secretary's plan the well-managed and conservatively capitalized corporation would be limited as to profits the same as would the corporation with bloated capital and inefficient management.

Self-Governing Capacity

During the last two or three weeks I have noticed letters in your paper which indicate we still have a few very poor political losers. They seem to consider our democracy degenerate, our electorate ignorant, etc., because they do not vote their ticket.

I believe our people are showing more capacity for self-government today than ever before. Why, 90 per cent of the newspapers can't influence them. They do their own thinking. In the last campaign the political nonsense against a third term did not fool them. This restriction on freedom would have served only the reactionaries. If a President achieved, from the standpoint of the greatest good to the greatest number, the reactionaries could get him out, before he could consolidate his gains.

Some of your letter writers do not like the fact that the Constitution makes the President Commander in Chief of our armed forces. They want Congress to be Commander in Chief. They must love talkfests, political squabbling, indecision and delay rather than efficiency. Is not our President elected by the people, as well as Congress? Does he not go before the people every four years to receive his mandate? Do not the two leading candidates who polled 49,000,000 votes represent the people? The President never violated the Constitution and they know he has plenty of precedent in history for his acts.

Destroyers' Destiny

You have rendered a great service not only to your subscribers but to your country and her constitutional Government by devoting so generous a portion of your October 2 issue to the remarks of the great authority on Russian affairs, Father Walsh, and the Honorable Martin Dies, who has been so courageous and tireless in his efforts to protect this Government from the evil of Communism and Nazism, both of which will be destroyed. The Lord's ways are strange and mysterious and it is my belief the destiny of the destroyers is in the hands of the One they would destroy. It would be foolhardy for any one individual, to say nothing of a nation, to entertain for a moment the thought of interfering in what appears to be the only solution of a deadly evil. Questions, sufficient to distract any Christian, are those before our country today: Shall we contribute through arms, etc., to this massacre of evil? If we do, is our motive charity or self-preservation (surely not a desire to promote or embrace either of the evils? Lastly, would it not be better to confine our aid to that of the unfortunate misled on both sides, when these two creatures of evil are no more and the mysterious battle has restored to these long suffering, peace and freedom?

Bicycle Licenses

Why not compel bicycle owners to have license tags attached to their bicycles?

At least one city that I know of does, Toronto. I have a son who has had two bicycles stolen from him during the past 12 months and neither of them has been found by the police or himself.

If the owners of bicycles were forced to obtain and attach license tags to them, the theft of a bicycle would not be so easy to get away with. The tag would also serve as a means of immediate identification in the event that a bicycle rider was in an accident and rendered unconscious.

At present there are no means of identifying the rider and should it become necessary to send him to a hospital and perhaps operate upon him, his parents could not be notified. If the rider had tags on his wheel, it would only be necessary to call the Traffic Bureau to identify him in the same manner as automobiles are identified through the bureau.

License tags in my opinion would materially reduce bicycle thefts. According to our own experience bicycle stealing must be quite a racket. Under the present system there seems to be no means of checking it. If we are going to stand by and tolerate youngsters stealing bicycles, we must surely expect that their next step will be stealing automobiles.

The cost of a license tag for a bicycle need not be expensive; it could cost as little as a dollar or even fifty cents, and I am sure that it would be well worth that amount to keep boys from falling into the habit of stealing and also serve as a means of identification and registration.

Extra Purchases

Foolish vulgarians rush to buy things. It is a disgusting sight. Somebody suffers when morons make extra purchases. Such folly is inexcusable. Poor families are deprived of real necessities.

The Post Impressionist

The Military Pig

Just whether or not this tale is another mythical legend of old Kentucky I can't say; but up in Mercer County, which is the scene of many an Indian fight, there is still standing old Fort Harrod, where is the beginning of the story of the military pig. And there must be some truth in the tale for history gives it a good account.

During the years of 1812-13, when the newly formed confederacy of colonies, calling themselves the United States, were fighting for the second time in a deathlike struggle against Great Britain, Kentucky furnished several regiments to the cause.

Gov. Isaac Shelby, of King Mountain fame, was the commander of the State troops and under Gen. William Harrison, of the Army of the West. In the year of 1813 a company of volunteers en route to join Shelby's army were quartered at Harrodsburg for a time in order to recruit more troops. After staying for several weeks and gathering sufficient numbers of volunteers they marched from Harrodsburg northward toward the Ohio. About a mile from town they came upon two pigs fighting. Any Kentuckian likes to see a fight and delayed the march, in spite of the officers' loud and vigorous protest, to watch the fight. When the march was resumed again, it was observed that the victorious pig was following in the rear, and at night when the company encamped, the animal also hunted itself a shelter.

For the remainder of the march through Kentucky to Ohio the pig accompanied the troops. When they came opposite Cincinnati, at which place they crossed in a ferry boat, the pig on coming to the edge of the river promptly plunged in and swam to the other side where it waited for the company to be ferried over, then resumed its pace as customary in the right flank of the moving column.

In this way the new company mascot kept on with the troops until they reached Lake Erie. On the journey as the men became familiar with the pig, it was taken into their confidence and assumed the role of a private soldier on full rations. Often the troops found themselves without food as armies in those days traveled without kitchen camps, depending on the countryside for their supplies, and whenever this happened nobody had any thought of butchering the pig for their own subsistence. Whatever they had was shared with the pet and if it fared scantily at times, it grunted along manifesting its patriotism for the freedom of its country.

At the lake where the troops were to embark with Shelby's army for an invasion of Canada, the pig sailed with the troops for Bass Island. From there she was offered passage again into Canada, but obstinately refused to embark the second time. The story goes that her conduct was attributed to constitutional scruples and observed that she knew it was contrary to the Constitution of the United States to force a pig over the border. So she was left on Bass Island to her fate.

The war went on. At Raisin River the horrible defeat of the Kentuckians went down in history as the goriest victory of the Indians and the British, which was later revenged at New Orleans. On the lakes other Kentuckians helped Perry to win his victory and at the Thames Gen. Harrison's Army of the West and the Kentuckians from Mercer County defeated Tecumseh, breaking the hold of the British in the Northwest forever.

The campaign ended with that battle in the early autumn of 1813 and the Mercer County troops recrossed the lake to the island again where they halted overnight to form the company again. As soon as the line was formed, to the great surprise of the soldiers there was the pig on the right side of the line ready to resume her march.

Winter set in as the troops marched wearily through Ohio toward the river and the pig suffered intensely. However, it reached Maysville, where the company joyfully entered the State again.

It gave out under the severe hardships and was given to Gov. Shelby, who brought it home in a cart and placed it on his farm.

The pig was claimed to have lived for several years afterwards and was the object of the reunion of the company on several occasions to celebrate their campaign.

Religion And Politics

The apparent attempt of a group of ecclesiastics to use our Government as a catspaw for the introduction of religion into Russia is both foolish and ill-advised, and our politicians, if wise, will avoid any such design.

We have numerous instances right here in our own land of attempts to disregard the Constitution of our country in interference with public education, especially in relation to our public schools. Unless discouraged, serious consequences are sure to follow this un-American course. Public servants should be constantly reminded of the seriousness of political and religious affiliation and the harm it has caused in other lands. Religion and politics do not mix where religious freedom prevails. History is conclusive proof of this. And the liberyt-loving people of the United States want none of it.

Communism is bad enough, but there are other isms in the United States quite as bad, but not so openly apparent because operating under the banner of Christianity.

Let us be wise in our day and generation.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Russia, America And Mr. Roosevelt

LIPPMANN

THIS IS NOT the first time that Russia and the United States have found themselves in the embarrassing position where their national interests are similar and their political and moral principles antagonistic. As Mr. Dewitt Clinton Poole has just pointed out in a most illuminating study," a strange contradiction "has characterized throughout history the intercourse of the two great continental empires."

Russia and America have been exceedingly important to one another, and in the great alignments of world politics they have on the whole generally found themselves on the same side. But never, except for a few months in 1917 between the fall of the Czars and the rise of the Bolsheviks, has either country liked the other country's government. Though Russians and Americans generally get on very well together when they come to know one another personally, they have been ideological antagonists throughout their history and at the same time they have as nations been natural allies.

THUS CZARIST Russia was among the last, perhaps the very last, of the great powers to recognize American independence. Russia refused to receive Dana, who was commissioned as American Minister in 1780. Though Great Britain signed the treaty of peace in 1783, 26 years passed before the Czar Alexander III accepted the credentials of John Quincy Adams, and another 23 years passed before Russia agreed in 1832 to sign a treaty of commerce.

The Czars of Russia had no liking for the political ideology of the young American republic. Yet during our Civil War, which coincided with the Polish insurrection in Europe, the Russian government sent six warships to New York Harbor and another squadron of warships to San Francisco. The Russians made this move at a moment when Britain and France were considering an intervention in Europe to support the Poles and were threatening also to recognize secession over here.

The action of Russia was dictated by no love of the American ideology, and was certainly the opposite of disinterested, but by the fact that then as now the national interests of the two countries happened to coincide.

THEY HAVE ALMOST always been ideological enemies, and in critical periods they have each in its own interests been partners. Thus, after the Civil War it was to Russia's interest to sell and to America's interest to buy Alaska. Yet in 1911 Russia's oppression of the Jews caused Congress to pass a joint resolution terminating the commercial treaty which had existed since 1832. And in the Russo-Japanese War of 1905, America's popular sympathy was overwhelmingly against Russia, but America's national interest in the balance of power in the Far East caused President Roosevelt to work for an end of that war lest Russia be driven out of Siberia.

In the first World War the Franco-British alliance with Czarist Russia was morally most damaging to the Allied contention that they were fighting against autocracy. And as a matter of fact, though it was mostly coincidental, the American intervention in April, 1917, did not take place until after the overthrow of czarism in March, 1917. Yet once America, in its own interest, had intervened in the war, one of the first things it did, then as now, was to make every effort to keep the Russian armies in the fighting.

During the World War, after the Bolsheviks had made a separate peace, American troops were landed in Siberia, ostensibly to cooperate with our Japanese associates in preserving order, but actually to see to it that Japan did not take advantage of Russia's weakness to get possession of Siberia. Then, as now, we knew that though we disliked the Russian government, it was an American interest that Russia should not be dismembered and should remain independent.

IN THE INTERVAL between the two World Wars our ideological antagonism to the Russian government was expressed by our refusal to recognize it. In 1933 we did recognize it. Our recognition of Soviet Russia occurred after Japan had clearly embarked on a campaign of conquest by seizing Manchuria in 1931, and it occurred a few months after the Nazis had seized power in Germany. Though the uninformed have attributed the recognition of Russia to the leftist sympathies of the New Dealers, the determining historical cause was the fact that with the appearance of an aggressive Japan and an aggressive Germany, the United States needed the Russian counterweight.

For it just is the fact, regardless of ideologies and sympathies, that Russia in Asia is a powerful check upon Japanese expansion and Russia in Europe a powerful check upon German expansion.

THERE IS conclusive proof that though Russia and America are ideologically opposed, though the Russian Communist influence in America is subversive, yet as sovereign nations they are not in conflict and have great interests in common.

Throughout the whole period of our refusal to recognize the Bolshevik government, during the last years of Wilson and of the 12 years of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, it never occurred to anyone to appropriate a dollar to arm the United States against Russia. In fact, during the period when the Russian government was regarded as the outstanding enemy of mankind, Mr. Harding and Mr. Coolidge, and then Mr. Hoover, proceeded with American disarmament, never for a moment thinking the Russian menace was the menace of war.

And as regards Russia, they were quite right. Russia is a great land power, an elephant, and America is a great sea power, a whale—the elephant and the whale are both formidable but they cannot and do not fight one another. When we started to rearm, it was not against Russia, but against Japan and Germany. For Japan is already a great naval power, and out for conquest, and Germany, if she conquered Britain, would also be a great naval power.

Russia, holding Japan in check at Vladivostok and supporting China's resistance to Japan, has been the tacit ally of the American Navy at Hawaii, just as the Russian armies, standing from Leningrad to Odessa, are the obvious allies of America and Britain in their struggle to hold the Atlantic.

THESE ARE THE realities of our relations with Russia, that now as always we are separated by an ideological gulf and joined by the bridge of national interest. It is in the light of this fundamental truth that we should form our policy, both in giving material aid to the Russian army and in touching the question of civil liberty and especially of religious freedom in Soviet Russia.

On the latter point surely the wisest attitude is that of Father Walsh, of Georgetown University, the most thoroughly informed of all Americans on the religious problem in Russia. Father Walsh's attitude, if I understand it correctly, is that the President's confusing remarks at his press conference, are in effect a pledge to use the American influence in Russia in order to induce Stalin to begin to put in practice the religious liberty which the words of the Soviet constitution seem to promise.

If what the President meant to say means anything, it must be that. For if he meant what Congressman Fish and the America First Committee are so jubilantly saying it meant, that Russia now has religious freedom, the President was affirming what he himself in an official statement last June explicitly denied.

THE PLEDGE IS one that he ought to take. For, as America helps Russia to survive the Nazi attack, it will have influence in Russia, and that influence must, of course, be used in behalf of human liberty. But it cannot be said too strongly that casual, off-hand remarks at a press conference are the worst possible way to deal with matters of such great moment. These are things to be done carefully and thoroughly, with great consideration, not things to be tossed off in this fashion.

Mr. Roosevelt is indulging in a petty vanity, which is that he is very smart, when he undertakes to give press interviews on foreign affairs in times like these. Mr. Churchill, who has as good a brain as Mr. Roosevelt, does not do it, and President Wilson did not do it when the point was reached where there were at stake, not domestic issues, but questions of war and peace, of life and death.

If the President is wise he will henceforth confine his press conferences to domestic questions and to formal announcements of action taken, declining all questions in the field of foreign affairs, or at the very least requiring that they be put in writing and answered, if at all, the next day. This is elementary prudence. For no one can be smart enough to give the right answer impromptu to any question popped at him in a crowded room and often at the end of an exhausting day, and sometimes by some who lay traps and dig pitfalls. A really smart man would know that he can't and that he should not try.

*Mr. Poole's article is published by "New Europe" for September, 1941. Mr. Poole has been charge d'affaires in Russia, July, 1917-June, 1919; chief, division of Russian affairs, State Department; counselor, American Embassy, Berlin. Since 1930 he has been chairman of the advisory board of the School of Public Affairs at Princeton.

Capetown Is Silent 2 Minutes Daily To Pray For Victory

By the United Press

Cape Town, South Africa, Oct. 3. A cannon boomed at noon today and all life in this bustling crossroads of the world came to a standstill.

It was a signal to pray for victory.

The streams of automobiles on Adderly Street, Cape Town's main thoroughfare, slowed to a stop. Shoppers halted on the sidewalks. Chattering groups on street corners fell silent and stood at attention.

Workers in shipyards, office buildings, department stores, hotels and even the American consulate dropped whatever they were doing and stood in silence.

The only sound came from a loudspeaker in the open doorway of a shop. It was a bugler sounding "taps."

Newsreel From S. A.

By Carlos C. Nagel

Photographic Strategy

"LATEST UFA newsreel No. 196 is shown here today." This is still one of the feature attractions announced prominently every day in cinema houses throughout many countries of South America. These films arrive from Germany as regularly as the daily milk delivered every morning, they arrive weekly by German Condor planes, carefully prepared and properly edited in Spanish or Portuguese.

South Americans are great movie fans and Germans are excellent photographers. Furthermore German films are cheap, in fact frequently given away for a song to movie houses that have to pay in dollars for American films. There is no need to expand as to what these UFA films show but what they show is well thought out, with a careful eye on Latin-American psychology. What generally follows in a standard program is an American newsreel in the good old American way: the launching of an American warship with very little pomp, more exciting and vivid scenes of a strike in the Middle West, the President delivering a speech defending his position perhaps, a fashion show in New York City, troops waving gaily from trucks bound for maneuvers in the South. Nothing very dramatic in comparison with the exciting views of well-equipped German troops entering a Russian town "previously destroyed by the Communistic savages." "Hilarious" shots of Russian war prisoners being washed with hose, "de-loused" and "civilized" by neat-looking, well-dressed German soldiers.

With this taking place today among our neighbors, we here are having an investigation against American "war propaganda" pictures which in comparison to the German ones are infantile and could incite to war only the boys in their teens, still interested in "Hi-ho Silver."

THE BRITISH blockade has made some very odd enemies for Britain in South America. Take the Indian women that come every Sunday to the colorful San Francisco market in La Paz, Bolivia. That market is quite a show place in a city that has the distinction of being the highest capital in the world (12,000 feet above sea level.) To this market the Indians from the surrounding country bring their products, mostly "chuno"—dried potatoes, "chalona"—dried mutton, quinine, and a great assortment of knitted and woven articles in the most entrancing color schemes.

In the past these colors were obtained by a long-drawn-out process of chewing certain beets and plants. Bright and very permanent colors were the result. The thorough German salesmen, always calling on every town and hamlet, lost no time selling the natives their chemical colors with minute instructions as to their use. The result was that until not so long ago the foreign visitor to the San Francisco market was awarded with the incongruous sight of high piles of cases of German dyes among all the natural products offered by the vendors.

Today these Indians have been compelled to go back to their old and not very sanitary system of chewing natural dye for their shawls, blouses and "polleras"—skirts. They don't like it and blame the "gringoes" for it.

MARTINIQUE, a link in the chain of colorful islands uniting the United States with northeast South America and a French colony which would play an important part in the defense of the Western Hemisphere, has one of the most fascinating backgrounds among those islands full of romance and saga.

More than a third of a century has passed since the eruption of sinister Mount Pelee which caused the destruction of the island's capital, Saint Pierre, and the death of 40,000 inhabitants. It may be called the modern version of Sodom and Gomorra, for prior to the total destruction of the island, Martinique was considered the gayest, wealthiest, and wickedest of all the islands in the Lesser Antilles.

Today it is a sober, industrious piece of land in which the inhabitants have built a new capital, Fort-de-France, prosperous and progressive, far more so than her British neighbors.

If the United States has a city that gave to the world a woman that came close to be Queen of England and Empress of Britain, tiny Fort-de-France shows proudly in its main square, surrounded by royal palms, a statue of its famous daughter Marie Josephine-Rose Tscher de la Pagerie. She was an empress and of an empire as proud as France was in the last century. Josephine, Empress of the French, a creole girl that reached the pinnacle of women's ambition, was born in America, in Martinique, in the tiny hamlet of Trois-Illets, right across the bay from Fort-de-France.

THE OLD QUESTION of American oil properties in Mexico and its settlement has been revived and guided into a channel of friendly solution. The first payment for Mexican appropriation of American property in that country, 9 million dollars to be paid during this month, is supposed to be the first step toward bridging a monetary gap that is wide.

The Mexicans have mentioned a sum as low as 70 million Mexican pesos as the value of the American properties. American oil interests claim as much as 500 million dollars due them.

To Latin-Americans the solution of this problem between the United States and Mexico will dispel many doubts. Some South Americans are inclined to look at Mexico as "the State of Maine within the South American nations." Mexico is closest to the States, it has had more scraps with its big neighbor than any other one. South Americans think that the Mexicans know the "Yankees" better and that their decisions "carry the rest of the nations" . . . to an understanding without a joker up anyone's sleeve.

Rosenberg, The Balt

By Andre Visson

Proponent Of Russo-German War

AMONG all the Nazi military and civil leaders none is following with keener, more passionate interest the developments of the Russian campaign than a short, darkish man 48 years old, with a tense gaze in a cleverly distinguished face, whose offices at 17 Margaretenstrasse contain one of the greatest collections of Russia's maps in Berlin.

For all the Nazi leaders the Russian campaign is the most important stepping stone on the way leading to the conquest of the world. For the Baltic teacher of design who became the head of the Nazi party's private foreign office, it is the realization of his life dream.

For Adolf Hitler the conquest of Russia must assure the triumph of Nazism in the world. For Alfred Rosenberg Naziism is the modern reincarnation of the old Order of Teutonic Knights, called to life to conquer Russia.

For 22 years Rosenberg, who fled in 1918 from Soviet Russia to Germany, had stubbornly, passionately worked, fought, intrigued to make possible this conquest.

He helped Hitler to build up the ideology of Nazism. He tried to make of Nazism an intellectually ordered system. He inspired, guided and determined Hitler's Eastern policy.

It had been his life dream to see Germany crush Bolshevism, conquer Russia and permit him, an obscure Balt intellectual, who had once had to obey the Russian Czarist administration, become the master of hundreds of millions of those Russians, whom he despises, but by whom he cannot help but feel intellectually attracted.

ROSENBERG'S political activity has been more important than his personality, but his personality is undoubtedly more interesting than his abundant pseudo-philosophical literary work.

Rosenberg was born on January 12, 1893, not in Talinn (Reval), as all his biographers say, but in the little Estonian town of Rakvere (Vesenberg). Rosenberg's father was a middle-class tradesman from Riga, who moved in his youth to Talinn, where he established a shop supplying leather to local shoemakers. Rosenberg's mother was a more or less Germanized Estonian.

The Rosenbergs considered themselves Baltic Germans, but they belonged as a matter of fact, to those Germanized families in Baltic provinces whom the Letts and the Ests describe with contempt as "willow" or "juniper Germans." The genuine Baltic Germans, particularly the Baltic barons, descendants of the Teutonic knights and the patrician German merchantmen, maintaining Hanseatic traditions in their splendid medieval homes, on the other hand, despised the Rosenbergs' class of "mixed-blood" and socially inferior people, as they despised the Letts, the Ests and the Lithuanians.

IT was certainly not a coincidence that among the Nazi leaders several were born outside Reich's boundaries.

The national sentiment is getting particularly strong in the border regions, where the nationals have a feeling they are the fighting watchdogs of the nation. Those who live outside the boundaries of their national state either full-heartedly accept their new nationality or remain true to that of their ancestors and become super-nationalists.

The Austrian-born Hitler found understanding aides in Baltic-born Rosenberg, in the Egyptian-born Hess, in the Argentinian-born Darre. The Germans were the only great European nation having important ethnical groups outside their borders. Hitler, the Austrian, originally conceived the idea of a monolith German "Mitteleuropa" bloc, controlling all the Danubian area and imposing its will on all Europe.

Rosenberg and Balt enriched Hitler's idea by inviting Hitler's Germany to extend its control over the Baltic shores, the Ukrainian black earth, the oil wells of the Caucasus and the fabulously rich Ural Mountains. Hess and Darre, the foreign Germans, suggested that as master of the European continent Germany could utilize all its ethical groups, spread over the world, to transform the lands overseas into German colonies and dominions.

Rosenberg's part was, however, particularly important. He brought to Hitler not only ideas but weapons for their realization, which he had found in the experience of his youth and of the Russian revolution.

LITTLE Alfred grew up in a most peculiar feudal section of the pre-war European world, and his youth contains many hints for the understanding of Nazi ideology and Hitler's aggressive plans against Russia.

When Rosenberg finished his studies in Reval's German high school and entered the Riga Polytechnicum, the members of "Rubonia," the most exclusive student corps, refused to consider him as a German and as their social equal. He had to produce his grandfather's birth certificate and to insist on his German education, in order to be admitted into Rubonia's clubrooms in the old wooden Powder Tower!

Rosenberg did not criticize the Rubonia corps for its racial and social prejudices. He was convinced of the superiority of the German race. He believed in the necessity of an aristocratic order. But he remarked to his college friends that the aristocrats of tomorrow will be those, who dare, according to Nietzsche's invitation, to "live dangerously."

In 1915, Riga's Polytechnicum, because of the war, had to be transferred to Moscow. Rosenberg, who spoke as perfect Russian and Esthonian as German, came into close contact with Russian life. It was a curious life. On one hand, the Baltic barons had in Russia a privileged position at the court, in the administration and in the army. On the other hand, the Russians appeared to have no racial or social prejudices. There were no student corps at their universities. There was an official anti-Semitism, of an administrative brand, but Jewish bankers and artists, who in Riga and Talinn would never be allowed to cross the threshold of Baltic baronic households, were received in Russia even by the grand duke.

ROSENBERG came to the conclusion that Russia obviously suffered from lack of "order" and badly wanted a reinforcement of social discipline, which could be realized only with Germany's help. These years spent in Russia developed in him a most curious dualism, which can be still found in the Nazi ideology.

He felt himself, on the one hand, superior to the Russians, as he felt himself superior to the Letts, the Ests and the Lithuanians, to say nothing of the Jews. He suffered, on the other hand, from his inferiority complex toward the Baltic barons, who jealously maintained their social privileges.

He could not help admiring these descendants of the Teutonic knights who fought once to impose Germany's rule on the Baltic shores. But he despised them for having become, with few exceptions, the Czar's loyal servants. He had confused dreams of a new society, in which the aristocratic traditions and privileges of the past would be at the disposal of the new daring masters. These ideas were in the wind, forerunners of the Russian revolution.

This revolution, followed by Russia's capitulation at Brest-Litovsk, destroyed the paradoxical world in which the young Balt was living and indicated to him the road to follow. The Czars disappeared. There was no hope for him to become one of the masters of this immense, rich and wonderful country by serving the Czars in the old-fashioned Baltic baron style. A new world was in the making. Rosenberg felt that in this new world his only chance, since he did not, since he could not accept the Bolshevik revolution, was on Germany's side.

He fled Russia. The job of teacher of design at Talinn's high school, which he had obtained as a graduate of the architectural section of Riga's Polytechnicum, could not satisfy him. He came to Germany with many other German and non-German refugees from Russia. He followed them to Bavaria, where many Russian monarchists were settling. There, in Munich, in 1919, the 26-year-old Rosenberg met the 30-year-old Adolf Hitler.

The Gallup Poll

Institute Survey Finds More Than 5 Persons In 10 Still Like to Gamble—Admit They Lose

By Dr. George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 3.—War or no war, the average American still has an itch to do a little betting—you might call it gambling—now and then.

That's the indication from a new survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion which shows that more than five Americans in every ten (54 per cent to be exact) say they have laid money on the betting line at least once in the past 12 months, or played for stakes in some game of chance.

Three years ago a similar institute checkup found 53 per cent admitting to one or more such ventures.

And most of them freely admit they've lost more than they've won.

With an adult population of somewhat more than 80,000,000 men and women, the survey indicates that about 43,000,000 of them have succumbed to the betting or gambling temptation at least once in a year's time.

Government Lotteries?

Legislators occasionally suggest that some way should be found to harness the gambling instinct for the benefit of State or Federal treasuries. And the indications are that the public itself would indorse Government lotteries toward such purposes as old age pensions and other causes. Institute surveys have shown.

One of the most interesting facts brought out in the present survey is that the commonest forms of chance-taking are not betting on the horses, playing the "numbers" game, taking a spin at roulette or any of the more garish types of money losing, but rather buying tickets in church-conducted lotteries and raffles, playing cards for money at the neighbor's house, or slipping a nickel or a dime into a nearby pinball or slot machine.

This doesn't mean that the "turnover" in some of the latter ventures is bigger than the annual "take" from horse-race betting, for instance, but only that more people take part.

The following list shows the percentage of Americans who said they had taken a chance in some of the commoner forms:

1. Church lotteries 24%
2. Playing cards or dice for money 24%
3. Slot machines 24
4. Punchboards 23
5. Betting on elections or athletic events 21
6. Betting on a horse race .. 9
7. Playing the numbers game 8

Some who reported they had bought tickets in church lotteries said they didn't consider they were engaged in gambling, since the proceeds went to charitable causes. Others said they would have bought sweepstakes tickets during the year, if the sweeps hadn't been largely discontinued abroad due to the war.

Three years ago, for instance, the institute estimated that approximately 10,000,000 Americans were buying sweepstakes tickets in a year's time.

One in Seven Ahead

Men and women in the East and Far West are the most consistent chance takers, the results show. Most abstainers are in the South and Middle West. Farmers especially are less willing to dribble their money away in such ventures.

As for coming out ahead—only one person in seven (14%) claims that much success.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Proverbs Revised By High Taxes

A fool and his money are soon parted; but the smart man can't keep much, either.

He had the Midas touch. But the Government clutch was too much for it.

Money is the root of all evil, and the Democrats are the best of all rooters.

Take care of the pennies and the Government will take care of the dollars.

All is not gold that glitters, but the Government won't quibble over it.

The wise man saves for the rainy day . . . and the tax department sees that he gets rain day and night.

Familiar Sayings Revised

He advanced so rapidly that he was in the hole all the time.

He started life on a shoestring and worked up to a point where the Government left him nothing but a buttonhook.

He started on $10,000 a year and had his income increased so often that he is now down to about $2500.

He left everything he had to his family, which settled with the Government for 5 per cent and a release.

He was so wealthy that even his enemies were sorry for him.

He was sole heir to his father's millions . . . but refused to get despondent.

Everything he touched turned to gold, the poor bum!

Familiar Chat Completely Altered by the Surtax

Boss—You have done so well I am raising you $200 a week and cutting you in on the profits.

Employe—You can't do that to me!

"There's a fortune in this for you!" said the promoter. So the prospect turned it down with a look of horror.

"Are you doing well in business?"

"I must be; the Government has just had one of MY biggest years."

Employer—I think I can see my way clear to treble your income.

Startled Employe—So you want to make more trouble for me, eh!

Industrial Captain—You have been of such value to the corporation that I am going to give you $10,000 more a year.

Subordinate—You don't have to make any threats like THAT to get me to quit.

What Happens To Union Dues?

PEGLER

TO ALL the American workers, men and women, who have been compelled to give up various sums of money to the licensed extortioners of the unions as the price of jobs on cantonments, factories and other works in the national defense or war program, greetings:

If you have not already lost or thrown away the receipts which were given you by the stick-up men at the gates of these projects, don't. Take good care of your receipts because there is a bare chance that these extortioners will be forced to refund your money by Congressional action and, anyway, even if it proves impossible to recover, you may be able to break up the racket and send some of these crooks to jail. Of course, many of these receipts are mere scribbles on little printed slips of paper, but save them anyway, because once a mass of them are placed in the hands of an honest committee they may add up to something like a case. I have seen a few myself which looked like book-makers' slips with signatures that seemed to have been scrawled with the definite purpose of defying interpretation. In such cases it is possible that the racketeer was grafting for himself alone and holding out on the local which he was supposed to represent.

That is an inviting possibility which is not likely to have been overlooked by the type of baboon who would rob a poor pick and shovel stiff of $25 or $50 that might have bought things for the family. Then, too, it is an established fact that some of these miserable rackets calling themselves unions pay the business agents or stick-up men a cash commission of $10 to $15 on each sucker delivered to the rolls and we want to be able to show the identical signatures of a lot of receipts by way of showing what a sweet racket this has been for those fragrant friends of the working man.

BUSINESS AGENT or organizer has a concession the like of which no independent swindler ever heard or dreamed of. The United States Government grants the union a license to rob the stiffs and they have to pay or the Government will turn them down at the jobs. And after they have paid, the Government protects the grafter by refusing even to ask him what he did with the money.

The Government doesn't even ask whether he turned it over to the so-called union. That is a matter to be fought out between him and the other grafters who hold the charter for the local which is a document conferring on the owners thereof the right to rob the American worker. But, of course, many of these locals are just little mobs of crooks who elect and reelect themselves and vote themselves bonuses and gifts and in such cases even if the thief goes through the motions of turning the money over to the treasury, minus his commission, it all amounts to the same thing, a stick-up.

Nobody has any idea how much these rodents have extorted from you workers and the total probably never will be known, but it certainly is way up in the millions and it all came out of the taxpayers because the money for the war jobs comes out of the Treasury. The taxpayers wouldn't mind if the money went to you, but when this system begins to break up and it is shown that they have been sacrificing for the clear benefit of these grafters operating under Government license they are going to mind plenty.

ANOTHER thing to make note of is the dates. Check back and set down the dates when you were hired and the dates on which you finished paying your initiation fees and were fired. Many of you were canned as soon as your shake-down payments were completed so that the crooks could initiate new suckers and rob them in turn and your receipts and memoranda will prove that. It will be important also to show that these rackets called unions have balkanized millions of you into little township and neighborhood jurisdictions so that even if you were a member in good standing of a union in, say, Norwalk, Conn., and you heard of a good job in New Jersey you would be treated as a foreigner in Jersey and compelled to pay tribute to the Jersey mob.

This is going to be good once the reaction starts. These evil gyps, protected by the Government and the great tradition of the labor movement, aren't off the hook yet. They think things have quieted down, but Congress is going to come alive on this thing yet and when that happens your receipts and testimony will be needed.

Copyright by New York Times

Tokyo, Oct. 3.—The official news agency Domei says Japan has protested to Great Britain and Iran against suspension of diplomatic privileges to the Japanese Legation at Teheran, including immunity for mails, diplomatic pouches and code messages. The press states that if the answers are unsatisfactory Japan will take retaliatory action, and Domei hints at even more grave consequences.

The press charges the Iranian action was inspired by Britain and Russia, who accused the Japanese Legation in Teheran of harboring the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem and a German who had played an important role in Iran.

According to the press, an investigation proved the accusations unfounded.

First Army on Eve of Mimic War

Barnyard Position—Soldiers of the Thirteenth Infantry look down the sights of the guns from their position taken in a barn on a South Carolina farm, near Columbia

The First Field Army is ready to begin the largest maneuvers ever staged in the East.

Monday more than 400,000 men under some 12,000 officers will start a mimic war in a 16-county area of the two Carolinas which will continue well into November. The Twenty-ninth Division, made up of men from the District, Maryland and Virginia, will take part.

Lieut. Gen. Hugh H. Drum, comcommanding general of the First Army, spoke to his officers yesterday at Monroe, N. C. In his audience were Governors of North and South Carolina and property owners who have placed their land at the Army's disposal.

Declaring that America was "faced with war under circumstances predicating the severest war test the Nation has ever faced," Gen. Drum emphasized the importance of a spirit of unity among both the armed forces and the civilian population.

The pictures here, released yesterday by the War Department, were made last week as troops prepared for the opening gun of the maneuvers.

Junk Business Booms Here

By Robert W. Harvey
Post Staff Writer

The lowly sardine can, the rusted-out bedspring, and the defunct jalopy are valuable articles these days. Sheared out of shape and mashed into compact little bales, these rakings of the junk-pile and used car lot are being shipped off to steel furnaces to be transformed into shiny new instruments of national defense.

Out on Benning Road Northeast, tucked under the shadow of the viaduct, the 7-acre scrap lot of Joseph Smith & Sons is handling about 75 tons of such cast-off metal a day, and shipping baled scrap steel to the mills of eastern Pennsylvania at the rate of 45 tons daily.

Right now, Philip Smith, manager of the yard, is doing his biggest business with plain, everyday cans. Truckloads of the containers are brought in by junk collectors from the city incinerator, where the microthin coating of tin which would adulterate the melted down steel has been burned off.

Workmen shovel the cans into the hopper of a triple hydraulic baling press, in which three rams compress 300 pounds of cans into an oblong bundle 2½ feet long and 16 inches square at the ends. Every minute an automatic lift hoists a bundle onto a chute and drops it down into a freight car.

Smith takes an ironic satisfaction in the fact that his balers were manufactured in Dusseldorf, Germany, and were among the first to appear in this country.

At the rear of the lot stands a jagged mountain of used car remnants, which Smith is not processing at the moment. Instead of shearing them up to fit into his comparatively small balers as he did formerly, he is reserving them for a new giant baler now being installed. The new machine will accommodate an intact auto body along with an assortment of fenders and parts to fill in the chinks, and turn the whole into a 2½-foot bale weighing half a ton.

The jalopies come to the baling yard from used car dealers throughout the city, where they have been first stripped of wheels, tires and usable parts. Some dealers dismantle the cars with man power and sledgehammers, while others batter them with steam shovels and crane hammers. Upholstery and wooden parts are burned out before they arrive at the Smith yard.

The prices at which Smith buys the scrap from collectors varies with the vendors' bargaining ability, but prices on the baled material are fixed by the Government. For this area, the metal brings in between $17 and $24 a gross ton depending on the grade and form of the iron or steel.

Air War—Then and Now: Navigators Aid Modern Bombers

A WORLD WAR I MACHINE GUNNER swings his gun toward pursuing planes. In the open cockpits, the artist says, "you had to be a pretty husky lad to swing the gun against the slip-stream"

Drawings by Clayton Knight from Associated Press Photos.

GUNNER IN A POWER TURRET turns his guns against an enemy. The gunner, says Knight, looses a stream of lead that pours out of his guns like water out of a hose

(Editor's note: Here is the second and concluding installment of Clayton Knight's comparison of aerial combat in World War I and the present war. Knight, aviation's foremost artist, was attached to the British Royal Naval Air Service as an American soldier in the World War and was shot down, badly wounded, behind the German lines late in 1917.)

By Clayton Knight

New York, Oct. 3 (The Special News Service).—I'll never forget how excited we pilots were when the first big Handley-Page bombers came out in 1917. The German Berthas—named after the widow, Bertha Krupp, of the Krupp Gun Works—had been giving the Allies an awful pounding and at last we had a big bomber that could repay in kind. The British called the Handley-Pages "reprisal" planes and we were plenty proud of them.

If anybody had told us then that in the year 1941 bombing planes would travel nearly five times as fast—335 miles an hour—at a ceiling of 36,000 feet and be able to go 3000 miles with a full load, we would have said they were crazy.

We had no crack navigators then as they have now. You just looked at your map and watched for landmarks on the ground and trusted to luck.

The navigator on modern bombers is one of the most important men on the ship. He sits back in his own compartment guiding the plane through darkness or bad weather.

We thought a navigator was a sailor in our day and all we ever hoped for was a fellow in the crew with a good sense of direction.

Incidentally, no bombers ever took off from England to bomb Germany in World War I, as they do today. They always were ferried over to France. If they had ever tried to bomb Berlin from London, they never would have been able to fly back. The distance was too great!

You hear a lot about bombsights today. We had them on our bombers—ours was a marvel of simplicity, just a frame with a couple of crossed wires and a sort of scale. It was so simple that everybody knew that the safest place to be during a raid was—on the target! Six of our bombers once did hit the target—a large gas house in occupied Belgium—and we were probably more surprised than the Germans.

But you're not safe on the target nowadays. Modern bombsights are mechanical marvels.

In combat, a gunner now looses a stream of lead that pours out of his guns like water out of a hose and in a few seconds his target is miles away. You can't turn one of these new ships on a dime, the way we used to do, and a diving attack steps up this incredible speed and cuts down the firing interval proportionally.

The biggest thing in gunnery is easily the multiple-gun, power-operated turret. The British brought this out first and I believe that this, more than any other development, saved the day for them during the Nazi daylight air raids over London.

Our two-seater fighters used to have a gunner in an open cockpit in back of the pilot. His job was to keep enemy ships off his tail and he could swing his gun around, with great difficulty, to make a broadside burst when necessary. But the air stream generally destroyed his aim and few planes were brought down in the World War by broadsides.

The Germans did not foresee this difficulty but the British did. Both sides have these turrets now—secrets do not remain secrets long in wartime. The turret is operated by hydraulic or electric power. A gunner stands in a bullet-proof glass cylinder which rotates at the pressing of a button. He is protected from the air stream as well as from enemy fire, and his synchronized guns can pour out a lead stream from almost any angle.

Government Stenographer, 37, Weighs Advisability Of Marrying Small-Town Man of Limited Education; She Sees Time Flying and She Wants Her Own Home

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 37 years old, a stenographer in the Government. I come of a good middle class family, my father being a machinist and my mother having a grammar school education. My brothers and sisters (there are four) are high school graduates. I attended business college and took a few night courses at the University. I am slow acting, refined, rather dignified, but with a good sense of humor and appreciate people of good character and refinement. I like good music, good plays, etc., and the less strenuous sports occasionally. I am not bad looking; some say "sweet," but on the timid, quiet side.

A man of 38 has asked me to marry him. I do not know him very well as he lives in another city. I met him this summer while visiting my family and have corresponded with him since. He is very likeable and considerate and seems to have many friends, but he only finished the eighth grade. He has a very good trade and could give me a very good home. On the other hand, his friends are of the less cultured type and he sometimes uses poor grammar, which bothers me a little. I don't know if I would feel right about introducing him to my Washington friends. However, I am getting old and the home he would provide is very appealing to me. I love the thought of having a home to care for. I am getting very tired of office work and have begun to feel very lonely in Washington,—which is far from my home;—and I don't like to go out in the evenings as I once did, to keep from being lonely.

Some time ago, I went with an older man,—he is 52,—who is rather young acting and much younger looking than his years. I stopped going with him because I thought he was too old for me and I felt rather self conscious about his age when in the company of my friends. However, I have started going out with him again and I don't seem to mind his age so much. He is refined, dignified and had a couple of years in college. He has an excellent, highly paid executive position in the Government, earning about twice as much as the other man.

Since meeting the less educated man, the older man seems much more desirable to me than before, and while he has never asked me to marry him, I think he might, if I treated him right and showed him I liked him well enough. My problem is whether to accept the younger man's proposal now, or to give the older man more time, to see if he will propose. Both men are kindly and, as far as I can judge, would make good husbands. I don't think I should wait to find anyone else, and I feel that marriage to either man would be preferable to carrying on much longer alone.

I feel that I could give my devotion and perhaps love to either man. I have some shortcomings myself and believe I couldn't expect to get just exactly what I want in a husband, so I will be satisfied with either. Both men approve of my religion and the younger one is considering accepting my faith as his own. The younger man seems to like going out evenings a little more than I'd care to and he may like to drink a little too much, socially. But I have only certain little indications to go on, in reaching this opinion; and I feel I might be able to adjust myself to his ways.

I think both men would fit in with my family quite well, as they are both kind and friendly. I have always been a little different from my family, because I do like the more cultural things, while they are interested in the usual small town card parties, sports, etc. But I also love them and enjoy them and their families. I will much appreciate your immediate advice, as the younger man is quite eager to get married and I should give him an answer. However, I think I could persuade him to wait a few months or so. Sincerely,

UNDECIDED

Facts to Consider In Reaching Decision

DEAR UNDECIDED: In my opinion, marriage to the younger man, on the basis of your present scant knowledge of him, would be most ill advised. The gist of your narrative and the shadowy picture it gives of him suggests to me that it would be a wretched mesalliance from start to finish, with you first condescending to him and he nervously deferring to you; and, later, you worriedly criticizing and trying to reform him, and he hotly resenting and crudely defying your efforts to polish him.

Look at the facts. You are apologetically aware of his lack of advanced formal schooling and ungrammatical speech. You instinctively disapprove of his friends as "the less cultured type." you have observed that he tends to keep a faster social pace than you would enjoy. He seems to have a noticeable thirst for liquor,—a taste which obviously you do not share. He works at a trade, whereas your lifelong ambition and effort have been to identify yourself with persons in the so-called professions. As his wife, you would be drawn back into small town life, which evidently does not appeal to you.

In brief, it seems that you are incompatible at every point of comparison you are able to make, on the basis of your brief acquaintance. And to top off this discouraging picture, you are not in love with him—but only tempted by the thought of the home his income could provide. Furthermore, it is highly significant that, in contrast to him and what he has to offer, your 52-year-old beau seems suddenly so much more desirable as a husband—when once you shrank from being seen in his company. It seems to me that this reaction alone constitutes sufficient warning against marrying the younger man.

However, if you want to make doubly sure of reaching a right decision, you might ask him for six months' time in which to weigh his proposal, in the light of a better acquaintanceship. Tell him you dare not say yes before seeing him again, perhaps several times,—and that you think it would help you to make up your mind, wisely and conclusively, if he were to come to see you in Washington.

If he is a reasonably minded man, he will approve your suggestion, interpreting your indecision as a sign in his favor, and respecting you more for carefully reviewing the momentous question. If he quarrels with the idea, or takes offense at your hesitancy, you should dismiss his suit without further ado. Only a recklessly unstable man would want —or expect—a woman to fall into his arms for the asking; and if he is that kind of man, you would be leaping from the frying pan into the fire in marrying him, no matter how hideously lonely your spinster estate may seem.

Supposing he visits you here, it is possible he may show to excellent advantage among your workaday friends; and that you will find yourself liking him immensely. Or he may, on the contrary, register as an uncouth outsider to the sort of circle in which you feel most at home. In either event, in view of your worried indecision, you owe it to yourself as well as to him to study him against your chosen background, before you risk affirmative action.

As for the older man—encourage his interest, by all means; but don't add to your present confusion of mind by assuming he might want to marry you, simply because he pays you some kindly court. Whether or not he proposes marriage, you stand to benefit from his friendly companionship, while groping your way to a sound decision regarding your "problem." As a casual but loyal beau, he should prove indirectly and immeasurably helpful to you —both as a sort of yardstick by which to measure your serious suitor's presentability and compatibility, and as a "friend in need"—to companion you through the let-down period you may expect to experience, in the event you do finally decide to pass up this none-too-attractive chance at matrimony.

Write Jane Driscoll, The Post fashion editor, about your personal clothes problems. She will be glad to help you.

'Blessed Event' Chic

FROM a business woman, who is interested in working awhile longer, comes a query to the Post Fashion Editor as to the whereabouts of maternity dresses that are "at once chic and yet concealing."

After scouting about, it was discovered that the woman "expecting" need no longer cling to the all too revealing "butcher-boy" dresses and full gathered styles, but she can wear some of the newest fashions. Peplum dresses and the two-piece jacket frocks are especially adaptable for maternity wear. As a matter of fact, the long torso effect is about the only fashion not found in maternity clothes.

In one local store was seen a stunning two-tone shirtwaist dress with an innovation for extra fullness. At the waistline, instead of having a drawstring, fullness is laid into unpressed pleats by snaps that may later be released. Another one-piece dress with a separate jacket also has snapped fullness in the dress. The jacket draws up on either side and is adjusted by tying to fit. It was pointed out that this style is high fashion because of the peplum effect of the jacket. Both dresses have three-fourths length sleeves.

Two other styles shown were also concealing and chic. One was a dress with peplum-type pockets set on like a belt. Front ties gave the effect of a separate coat hiding front fullness, but the outfit was really a one-piece dress. The other frock was of the plainer shirtwaist variety with elastic insets at either side of the bodice, and a belt of many eyelets. Nearly all styles have tucks for bodice fullness and come in the newest colors—defense blue, olive green, brown, black and blue combined with brown and black.

Hat Problem

IN RESPONSE to a recent story as to how to adapt style trends in hats to a particular shape face, one girl has written as follows: "Why is it that the person endowed with the round face and high cheek bones is always left out of the picture? What type of hat can she wear?"

The millinery buyer of a local department store, Miss Naomi Washburn, gave the answer to this question. "The woman with this type of face" should shy away from rounded crowns or rounded brims of any kind," said the buyer, "and should choose shapes with irregular lines." Miss Washburn also pointed out that height in the crown, rather type was not mentioned in the previous hat story).

Round-the-Clock Nail Polish

Women today are too busy with earning livelihoods or aiding defense to change make-up and fingernail polish each time they switch costumes. Like the pretty model above, they want one shade to see them through a morning-to-midnight schedule. To meet this demand a widely known maker of nail polish created "Hothouse Rose" a warm muted rose tone that blends with all fall wardrobe colors

Style on Shipboard

A YOUNG BRIDE who is bound for Porto Rico to meet her husthan a mushroom shape, was flattering. The short girl is able to wear a small irregular brim and the tall thin girl an irregular large brimmed hat. (The fashion editor regrets this band, recently asked the fashion editor if it would be necessary to take along clothes to dress for dinner. She had previously sent on most of her outfits with her husband, and did not want to buy a dinner dress just for the crossing, if it were not necessary.

Boats bound for such ports as Porto Rico, Bermuda, Trinidad and Honolulu are not luxury boats these days. They are used for transportation, rather than cruise purposes, as most passengers are only going one way. Passengers consist of wives who are meeting husbands, individuals who are being transferred for work, and adventure seekers going for work or pleasure. Passengers are on board for only a short time and there is no dressing for dinner. Slacks and sports clothes are the rule, as there are not even swimming pools on most of the boats.

The Grace Line ships going to South American countries such as Venezuela and Columbia, and the Kungsholm Swedish line going to Jamaica, Haiti, Nassau or Havana are considered strictly cruise ships of 12 days or more. On these boats passengers dress for dinner and sports, because they are out for a good time.

War Rations Aid Figures Of British

By Ida Jean Kain

AN AMUSING bit of information passed along by Bebe Daniels in her recent flying trip from England has to do with slimming. Some of the wealthier women who had been considerably too fat are losing weight on the war rations, and their physician, a prominent Harley Street specialist, observes that "they are doing just what I have been trying to get them to do for years."

As it happens, the snack they miss most, a heavy afternoon tea, is a main reason for their weight loss. "It is what I call a 'starch tea,'" Miss Daniels explained, "because there were always scones, crumpets, bread and butter, rolls and pastries. You weren't supposed to eat all those things. But you would eat quite a lot."

Butter and sugar are among the scarcities. "We are allowed a very tiny pat of butter and one lump of sugar at a meal in the restaurants and I haven't had cream for so long that although I was looking forward to some, I find it much too rich for me. Milk is still available for the children, but we expect that it will soon have to be rationed, too."

By good fortune and the hard work of the "land girls," for whom Miss Daniels has unlimited information, there were plenty of green vegetables this summer and the trend was toward the use of more of these foods in the menus. In spite of all the hardships, it would seem that the dietary has improved in some respects.

One of the less desirable phases, however, is the shortage of meat. Miss Daniels is a good practical dietitian when she says that "Everyone is working harder than ever before in their lives and they need meat."

Although there will be potatoes and such winter greens as broccoli, kale and spinach, the rationing is due to be more stringent. From what I can learn, they will need all the food we can possibly send over.

Since it is not permitted to feed an animal anything fit for a human, the dogs are on diets, too. They are getting horseflesh.

Along with 135 theatrical companies, Bebe Daniels and her husband, Ben Lyons, spend their free time entertaining the workers in shipyards, munitions plants, plane and truck factories, and all other industries engaged in defense work, as well as the fighting forces. As a result of their travels, they have been able to note the great changes that are taking place.

MARTHA SCOTT

Calavo Salad a Favorite of Miss Martha Scott

MISS Martha Scott, feminine star in "One Foot in Heaven," which premiere she attended at the Earle Theater Thursday night, has two things in common with me. First, her name is Martha Ellen, spelled in the usual way, while my "Ellyn" is spelled as handed down to me by my maternal grandmother. We each prefer our own spelling.

Then too, we both have a liking for fried chicken. This petite star likes mashed potatoes with lots of cream gravy to eat with chicken and potatoes, and fresh peas.

In private life Martha Scott is Mrs. Carleton Alsop and lives with her husband on a ranch at Northridge, Calif., in the San Fernando Valley. There they raise chickens, and have a great orchard in which grow avocado, lemon, orange, lime and fig trees, as well as a great assortment of vegetables.

From her trim little figure one would not expect this screen star to go in for foods like fried chicken, mashed potatoes and cream gravy. But she likes other foods, she says, like California fruits and especially calavos. While Miss Scott thinks this fruit is good enough in the natural state, yet she likes it too made into soup and an individual salad bowl. This dish, she says, makes a most satisfying luncheon dish. Here is a recipe coming from the California Foods Research Institute Kitchen for making this salad. They know all about this fruit (or vegetable) in California, for it grows in abundance there.

Individual Calavo Salad Bowls

Cut 2 calavos crosswise into 6 rings. Twist slightly to loosen seeds and separate rings. Cut small openings in centers of solid end rings. Pull off skin. Sprinkle with lemon juice and salt. Cut half the rings into halves crosswise, forming half-circles or crescents. Dice any leftover portions of calavo. Slice 2 bananas. Cut 3 slices pineapple into small wedges. Marinate banana, pineaple, diced calavo and 1 cup cubed orange in French dressing. Arrange shredded salad greens in 6 individual salad bowls and cover with marinated fruit mixture. Top each salad with a calavo ring and 2 half-circles. Serve French dressing separately. Serves 6.

Capital Society Fetes Visiting Houghtelings

Mrs. McCeney Werlich Gives Dinner For Couple Here From San Francisco

Winding up a whirlwind round of fetes for the visiting Houghtelings, Mrs. McCeney Werlich entertained last evening at dinner at her home on Sixteenth Street in honor of Mr. and Mrs. William Houghteling, here from San Francisco, Calif.

The Houghtelings, who came East to enroll their son in Andover College, stopped off in Washington to visit Mr. Houghteling's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. James Lawrence Houghteling, and were immediately besieged by friends planning parties for them.

Mrs. Houghteling, the former Miss Virginia Seure, is well known in Capital society and was a belle here when her grandfather, "Uncle Joe" Cannon, was Speaker of the House.

Planning to leave Washington today to motor to their home in San Francisco, the Houghtelings plan to stop off in Illinois to visit relatives of Mrs. Cannon.

Guests at last evening's dinner at Mrs. Werlich's include, besides the honor guests, Mr. and Mrs. J. Lawrence Houghteling, Representative and Mrs. Charles Dewey, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Snowden Hill, who have just returned from their honeymoon; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Keating, Mrs. Lionel Atwill, and Clarence Hewes.

Relatives Here Fete Visitors at Party

Earlier in the day the J. Lawrence Houghtelings had entertained for the visitors at a cocktail party at their home on Wyoming Avenue. Many of the guests at that event were old friends of Mrs. Houghteling who had known her during the "Uncle Joe" Cannon days.

On Thursday evening, the J. L. Houghtelings entertained their guests at a dinner and at an earlier hour that day Clarence Hewes gave a luncheon for them.

At Church Women's Rally

Mrs. C. Leslie Glenn, right, was principal speaker at the rally of the Washington Council of Church Women last night. As she arrived, she was greeted by Mrs. George A. Ross, president of the council, and Dr. Howard Stone Anderson, pastor of the First Congregational Church, where the rally was held

Mrs. Glenn Tells Churchwomen To Serve More Efficiently

"If we have ever fallen into the fault of keeping our churches a pleasant intimate group, let that time be past forever," Mrs. C. Leslie Glenn said last night, as she urged churchwomen at a city-wide rally to extend their efforts more largely into the life of the community.

Mrs. Glenn, wife of the rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Lafayette Square, was principal speaker at the rally sponsored by the Washington Council of Church Women and attended by representatives of approximately 150 Protestant churches, at First Congregational Church.

Speaking on "The Place of the Churchwoman in the Life of the City," Mrs. Glenn urged that women do more as individuals in community enterprises and also "serve more efficiently and faithfully to make the churches themselves have a wider usefulness."

She pointed out that much of the work "done for others" in the community is being done by church people.

"Only those who care enough about people—no matter what their peculiarities—will spend time trying to understand them. Only those who believe that every last child is valuable to God will make the effort to see that each individual has a chance to develop his fullest stature," she said.

Miss Etta Mai Russell, executive secretary of the council, outlined its new program of area work, centering in community life.

Washington has been divided into 20 areas, with a churchwomen's chairman in each. The chairmen will call meetings of key women, representing the churches in each area, in November, to assess the joint resources, to plan for their more effective use and to discuss improvements.

Miss Russell said that this method will take the churches' program "to the doorstep where the people are."

Mrs. George A. Ross, president of the council, was in charge of the meeting.

Plans were made for a luncheon October 25 to honor Mrs. E. Thomas Boyd, of Denver, defense chairman for the national D. A. R. It will be given at the Highlands.

Miss Phinney Will Conduct Defense Class

Miss Barbara Phinney, of Cambridge, Mass., who has joined the local Girl Scout staff as field adviser, will conduct the first of a new series of defense training courses for Scout leaders, beginning Tuesday.

The courses, planned under direction of Mrs. O'Neal Johnson, chairman of the training committee, will place emphasis on skills and knowledge useful in meeting emergencies. Health, safety and nutrition will be stressed in the 16-hour course, in session for two hours on Tuesdays and Thursdays, at Scout headquarters, 1906 M Street Northwest.

Women enrolled in the course will do their apprenticing in November in Girl Scout troops or on overnight camping trips.

Miss Phinney plans to demonstrate in a "black out" how Girl Scouts can help in an emergency. Other information will touch on the safe building of fires in cities where public utilities have been disrupted; types of primitive shelters which can be speedily erected; the efficient and comfortable carrying of possessions in haversacks made by Scouts. Games, songs and stories, which would help to keep up morale in an emergency, also will be included in the instruction.

A Girl Scout troop, Miss Phinney pointed out in an interview, is "an actual demonstration of democratic government in operation." She expects to lay particular stress on the high morale and better results to be obtained by working in small groups. This, she said, becomes increasingly important during an emergency, when it is necessary to secure prompt action.

Miss Phinney explained she had been in scouting practically all her life, joining the organization at the age of 11. Upon receiving her degree from Wellesley, she immediately took the Scout professional training courses at Pine Tree Camp, Plymouth, Mass., and Camp Edith Macy, Pleasantville, N. Y. Her latest assignment was field director at Cambridge, Mass. She takes the place on the local staff vacated by Miss Gwen Hurd, who came here from Madison, Minn., last spring to direct the Girl Scout day camps.

For those desiring a leadership training course during the day, a 16-hour course has been scheduled beginning October 9 at 10 a. m. at Rockwood, the Girl Scout estate on Conduit Road. This course will be directed by Miss Anne McLean, field adviser and director of Camp May Flather.

Women registered with the Central Volunteer Bureau for defense have enrolled for these leadership courses. Registrations are now being made at Girl Scout headquarters for the courses.

Other courses scheduled in the fall training program include a 20-hour Red Cross standard first-aid course to be given by Mrs. Daniel Long at Scout headquarters, beginning October 16, and a two-day "outdoor licensing course," October 18 and 19. The latter course is now required of all new leaders to qualify them to take troops on overnight trips.

Plans for the coming year will be made and committees will report upon the Immaculata College alumnae dance to be held in Philadelphia, October 31.

The meeting will be followed by a buffet supper at which Miss Donovan will be assisted by her sisters, Miss Anne Donovan and Mrs. Walter J. Dowling.

E. W. Marland, Once Okla. Oil Titan, Dies

Ponca City, Okla., Oct. 3 (AP).—Ernest Whitworth Marland, former Governor of Oklahoma and an oil man who once controlled holdings valued at $85,000,000, died today. He was 67.

A political career as Congressman and Governor climaxed a colorful life for Maryland.

Once head of the Marland Oil Co. and affiliated concerns, with interests in several nations and States, Marland controlled in 1928 interests valued at 85 million dollars. His personal fortune then had reached 30 million dollars.

MARLAND

Without bitterness Marland charged that "wolves of Wall Street"—investment bankers from whom he borrowed money—brought about the merger of the Marland Oil Co. and Continental Oil Co. He resigned as head of the Marland company and with him went many of his directors who had aided in building the huge oil firm.

His personal fortunes dwindled when he borrowed $1,500,000 on 15 million dollars worth of company stock to pay three million dollars income tax alleged due. He lost the stock but in 1931 was refunded $200,000 of the tax by the Federal Government. In 1934 he owned land near Ponca City valued at about five million dollars in normal times.

On these acres stands Bryant Baker's statue, "The Pioneer Woman." It was erected on a high bluff in 1926 at a cost of $100,000 and dedicated to Marland to the pioneer mothers of America.

Marland was credited with introducing geology to the oil industry as a regular method of determining location of oil fields, with initiating core drilling and wide use of the seismograph.

Born in Pittsburgh, Pa., May 8, 1874, the son of Alfred and Sarah McLead Marland, Ernest attended grade and high school in Rugby, Tenn., and Pittsburgh. He was graduated from the University of Michigan with a bachelor of laws degree when he was 19, but after two years abandoned practice of his profession and took a job buying coal and oil leases in Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia.

Studying geology and surveying, he made use of his information in drilling in a gas well in wildcat territory in Hancock, W. Va., and made his first million dollars. But he lost it in the panic of 1907. His father, a steel mill operator, had lost his fortune in 1893.

Starts Fortune on Credit

Marland went to Oklahoma in 1912 and using credit for supplies drilled in a gas well on the 101 Ranch. The Kay County Oil & Gas Co. was organized with a small office in Ponca City. It later developed into the huge Marland Oil Co. with holdings in Mexico, Canada and the United States.

In 1931, his huge fortune gone, Marland turned to politics and was elected to Congress from the normally Republican Eighth District of Oklahoma, although he was a Democrat. He aided in drafting the stock exchange and securities laws in 1933 and laws regulating the oil industry. Running on a "New Deal" Democratic platform, he was elected Governor in November, 1934.

In 1901 Marland married Miss Virginia Collins, daughter of a Pennsylvania Superior Court clerk. She died in Ponca City in June, 1926. They had adopted Lydie Miller Roberts, of Flourtown, Pa., the daughter of Mrs. Marland's sister. Two years after his first wife's death, Marland married Miss Roberts, then 28, after having the adoption annulled.

Two Fugitives Free Pal, Seize Two Hostages

Hamilton, Ga., Oct. 3 (U.P.).—Two men, identified as Forrest Turner and Slim Scarborough, notorious fugitives from Georgia's "Little Alcatraz" prison, today dashed into a road gang of convicts and shot their way out with a pal and two hostages in an automobile.

The two desperadoes freed Fred Stewart, who was serving 40 to 80 years for robberies, and took Guard Neal Hutchinson and Inspector Claude Allman as hostages. They sped toward Columbus, Ga., near where they later released their prisoners.

Capt. J. J. Elliott, of the Georgia highway patrol, who came here from Atlanta to direct the hunt for the convicts, said apparently none on either side was shot in an exchange of shots between guards and the desperadoes.

Turner and Scarborough also were wanted for questioning in the investigation of the murder of Marion Miley, golfing star, and her mother in Lexington, Ky.

Forty-three of the 60 convicts on the gang ran into nearby woods during the break. Thirty-two later returned voluntarily.

Turner has escaped from Georgia prisons eight times and Scarborough twice. Gov. Eugene Talmadge last Wednesday offered a reward of $250 for capture of each.

Earlier this year, Turner posed as a lawyer and secured the realease of five convicts from the Cummings, Ga., camp. He later was captured near Augusta, Ga.

D. C. Court Bill Is Due Next Week

McGehee to Submit Final Revision of Merger Legislation To Committee

Long-sought reform of the District's Police and Municipal Courts moved a step nearer realization last night as Representative Dan R. McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi, disclosed that he expected to report to the District committee next week a final revision of legislation merging the tribunals.

Barring unforeseen delays, McGehee indicated the measure would be in shape to go on the House calendar in time for consideration October 13, the next District legislative day.

Chairman Jennings Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, who has expressed a desire to expedite the measure, may be asked, McGehee stated, to call a special meeting of the committee to act on the bill.

In Dirksen's Hands

A nearly final draft of the bill is in the hands of Representative Everett M. Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, ranking minority member of the committee. Dirksen said he believed an "excellent job" had been done in revising the bill in accordance with suggestions made in both House and Senate hearings by leaders of the District bench and bar. McGehee is chairman of the subcommittee that conducted House hearings.

The bill has three salient features. First, it would combine the two courts into a single tribunal of nine associate judges and an administrative chief judge. Second, the new court would be given jurisdiction in civil cases up to $2000, whereas the present Municipal Court may try civil suits of $1000 or less.

As its third major feature, the bill would establish an intermediate court of appeals, composed of three judges and created for the purposes of hearing appeals direct from the new court.

To Relieve Congestion

By creating a new city court with increased civil jurisdiction, framers of the legislation hope measurably to relieve congestion in the civil divisions of the United States District Court.

Establishment of an intermediate appeals court likewise is calculated to relieve the United States Court of Appeals of a considerable burden.

The bill as written originally would have allowed 30 days after enactment in which to get the new court in operation. McGehee said last night he believed the time should be extended to 120 days.

"You are accepting a responsibility not only for your community but for the whole world," Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt told the 26 members of the St. Elizabeths Hospital School of Nursing graduating class at commencement exercises in Hitchcock Hall, on the hospital grounds, last night.

Pointing out the crucial need for nurses, the First Lady added that graduates' youth offered still another opportunity to serve their Nation.

"It is up to you," she said, "to determine what kind of a society you want to live in and work for that society by accepting the responsibilities as well as the advantages of democracy."

Mrs. Roosevelt presented the first diploma and also $10 award, given by the Hospital Alumni Association for outstanding scholarship and "adherence to the fundamental principles of nursing," to Cora Alice Bennett, of Ottawa, Ohio.

The diplomas, awarded by Dr. Winifred Overholser, superintendent of the hospital, and Miss Edith M. Hayden, superintendent of nurses, were given to:

Eklund Kills Time by Making Clock in Cell

John E. Eklund, 26, convicted sniper killer, is measuring what may be the last days of his life by means of a cardboard clock which he has constructed in his cell, it was learned yesterday.

Spurts of air coming through the ventilator in his cell, blow against a lever of the clock at regular intervals, setting other levers in motion and resulting in a reliable time-keeper, it was said.

Eklund, originally sentenced to die next Wednesday, will have much more time to watch his clock, as Justice Jesse C. Adkins yesterday postponed his execution until January 16, pending an appeal.

He was found guilty of first degree murder last June, after being tried for shooting to death a 17-year-old Negro, Hylan McClaine.

Young Davis was given a pair of skates. The second prize, Boy Scout flashlights, was awarded to a singing duo, Joel King, 6, of 1218 Twenty-ninth Street Northwest, and Pat Kelliher, 7, of 1226 Twenty-ninth Street Northwest. Third place and a Boys Club sweater went to a saxaphonist, Arthur Rodill, 12, of 1502 Thirty-third Street Northwest.

Jury Absolves D. C. Motorist In Man's Death

D. C. traffic deaths this year 67
Deaths this date last year 51

A coroner's jury yesterday exonerated a motorist in the traffic death of Ulysses Watts, Negro, 30, of 1834 Ninth Street Northwest, and at the same time Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued certificates of accidental death in two other recent automobile fatalities.

Adrian Thomas, 21, of 3517 Thirteenth Street Northwest, was absolved of blame in the Watts case when the jury decided his death was accidental.

It was testified that the victim was jaywalking across Ninth Street Northwest, near T Street, September 30. Thomas swerved his machine, it was said, to avoid striking another car and did not see Watts, who was standing in the street.

Dr. MacDonald's certification in the other deaths does away with the usual inquests. He signed certificates in the cases of Augustus Cook, Negro, 12, of 424 Ridge Street Northwest, and Judson Kingman, 27, of Maryland Park, Md.

The Cook boy was struck and fatally injured by a truck in the 1200 block Fifth Street Northwest, last Monday while riding a bicycle. Kingman died at Casualty Hospital Wednesday after his automobile crashed into a tree at Forty-ninth Street and Central Avenue Northeast, Tuesday night.

Natie Brown Pleads Not Guilty in Holdup

Natie Brown, Washington boxer, pleaded not guilty to a robbery charge yesterday before Justice Jesse C. Adkins in District Court. Two other men accused on the same charge, Sam Greenstein, 28, and Harry Roth, 42, both of Philadelphia, pleaded guilty.

All are charged with complicity in the $3233 payroll robbery here of the Valley Forge Distributing Co. on August 2.

Kline Wins 17 Blue Ribbons For Dahlias

Capturing 17 blue ribbons, Charles T. Kline, 1324 Taylor Avenue, Riverdale, Md., a contract painter, won the sweepstakes at the twenty-fourth annual dahlia show of the Takoma Horticultural Club which opened last night at the Takoma Park (D. C.) Elementary School, Piney Branch Road and Dahlia Streets Northwest.

With 66 points to his credit, Kline's exhibit of a red "Cherokee Brave" measuring 13 inches in diameter and 7½ inches in height, took a blue ribbon for the best dahlia in the show. It was the first time Kline exhibited in any flower show. He has been experimenting with a slip of the best bloom for two years. Most of his points were scored in the specimen classes. He also took one red ribbon and two whites.

Kline was awarded a silver bowl by Mrs. Fulton Lewis, of Alexandria, Va., for the most points and best dahlia.

A large pink "Premier Winsome" was adjudged the second best flower in the show. It was exhibited by J. Leslie Bowling, 915 Philadelphia Avenue, Silver Spring. The third best bloom in the show was an orchid pink "Greater Glory" exhibited by George U. Graff, 242 Peabody Street Northwest.

The bronze medal given by House Beautiful for the exhibit of six blooms on one or more variety went to H. C. Parker, 6412 Thirtieth Street Northwest, who displayed a basket of "Hillside Joy" blooms in yellow orange.

Runner up for ribbons in the show was N. A. Grossman, of Baltimore, who won 59 points, with six blues, 11 reds and 5 white ribbons. Percy F. Fulton and L. M. Clarke were judges.

The twentieth annual fall flower, fruit and vegetable show was held in conjunction with the dahlia show.

Highest winner in the supplementary show was Mrs. Joseph Sazama, 6324 Ninth Street Northwest, who scored 18 points in the collections and specimen classes. She took two blue, five red and one white ribbon.

Mrs. Eva Ross, Falls Church, Va., and Frank Pohanka, Burnt Mills Hills, Md., tied for second place with 17 points. Winning in various casses and arrangements, Mrs. Ross had two blue, two red and three white ribbons. Pohanka scored mostly in the rose classes with five blues and a red.

In the fruit and vegetable classes Winn T. Simmons, 318 Aspen Street Northwest, took six blue ribbons, exhibiting grapes, tomatoes, pears and other vegetables.

Nils Hansen and Simmons judged the roses. Other exhibits were judged by Mrs. E. A. Clark. John L. Bishop was chairman.

The show will be open to the public today from 9 a. m. until 9 p. m.

Man, 72, and Woman, 40, End Lives by Gas in D. C.

A 72-year-old man and a 40-year old housewife were found dead in gas-filled kitchens here yesterday afternoon within two hours.

The body of Harry H. Nichols, 72, was found at 3:20 p. m. at his residence, 7400 Twelfth Street Northwest, by his niece, Mrs. Norma Jackson. His head was on a pillow in the oven of the gas stove. The pilot light had been turned off and the jets were open.

Detective Sergt. Richard Felber said there was a note in which Mr. Nichols complained of ill health and said he could stand pain no longer.

David Cheseldine, listed as an Internal Revenue Department employe, found the body of his wife, Mrs. Bertha E. Cheseldine, 40, at 4:40 p. m. in their home at 3615 Twentieth Street Northeast. She lay on a table, her mouth over an open gas jet, police said. Her husband told police, Sergt. Felber said, that his wife had been in ill health and had attempted to commit suicide previously.

Kutz Heads Inquiry; 1942-43 Repair Fund Increase to Be Used at Once

An expected increase in the District's school repair fund for the fiscal year 1942-43 will be made immediately available upon investigation of reported fire hazards in 150 buildings, Engineer Commissioner Charles W. Kutz announced last night.

Commissioner Kutz will head an inquiry prompted by the Fire Department's annual report showing that only 30 of the city's 180 schools are safe from fire dangers. The report was turned over to Gen. Kutz for investigation by Commissioner John Russell Young.

"I don't thnik there is anything particularly alarming in the situation," said Young. "We have had the same type of fire report in past years and school authorities are attempting to replace antiquated buildings as fast as possible."

Perturbed Over Report

Gen. Kutz was perturbed over the reported lack of special fire exit doors in some of the schools and said he saw no reason why every institution should not be equipped with the so-called "panic bar" type of doors, which open easily from the inside, but which cannot be opened from the outside.

Any laxity on the part of teachers—who in the fire marshal's report were accused of keeping classroom exits fastened during school sessions—"is up to the school board to correct," said Gen. Kutz.

He also promised to investigate the possibility of installing fire alarm boxes in all public schools.

Gen. Kutz admitted that many buildings were beyond repair and should be torn down and replaced. He added, however, that the structural defects were being remedied wherever possible and that his inquiry would cover reports of faulty door fastenings and other inadequate emergency fire facilities.

Board Promises Action

Dr. Chester W. Holmes, in charge of senior high schools, admitted many schools lacked the "ideal" modern fire safeguards, recommended by the fire board.

They replied with the oft-repeated complaint—insufficient appropriations.

"Many of our school buildings are quite old," pointed out Dr. Holmes. "When they were built they had the latest forms of fire protection."

Both Holmes and Dr. Lawson J. Cantrell, in charge of junior high schools, emphasized, however, that schools were "reasonably safe" and there was no reason for a "panicky feeling" about the possibility of disastrous fires.

Cantrell Sees for Himself

Cantrell, after reading the fire inspectors' charges, took occasion to make a personal inspection of two schools, the Powell Junior High School, one of the "old" type, and the comparatively new Paul Junior High School, built 13 years ago.

In neither, he said, did he find conditions unsafe and reiterated that there there was no cause for "a panicky feeling." He stated, however, that he had confidence in the fire report and admitted "a certain element of danger."

Both Holmes and Cantrell were asked about charges of personnel negligence.

Both officials said exits were "never" fastened during hours when classes were in session.

Holmes and Cantrell pronounced "inexcusable" premature locking of doors and said if they learned of any specific cases they would call the principals or teachers in charge to immediate account.

Policeman Denies Driving While Drunk, Asks Trial

Charged with driving while under the influence of liquor, Policeman Frank E. Stroman, 41, of 3867 Beecher Street Northwest, was at liberty under $500 bail last night after pleading not guilty and demanding a jury trial at a Police Court appearance yesterday.

The officer, attached to the Eighth Precinct but detailed at Police Headquarters, was suspended by Acting Lieut. Horace F. Skinner, Second Precinct, at 1:30 a. m. yesterday.

Stroman was arrested in the 1200 block of Seventh Street Northwest, by Policeman J. P. Zier, on complaint of John Firms, 269 N Street Northeast, a taxicab driver. The hacker said his automobile was struck by Stroman's machine at Seventh and N Streets Northwest.

A charge of leaving after colliding was also placed against Stroman when he was booked, but Assistant Corporation Counsel Edward Thomas issued nopapers on this count.

The officer has won numerous commendations for efficient work. He was on emergency leave, due to the illness of his wife, at the time of his arrest.

Judge Tries Plan to Save Policemen Time in Court

Thirty-five defendants charged with being either drunk or disorderly were convicted by Police Court Judge Walter J. Casey yesterday without his hearing the testimony of the arresting officers.

Sitting in the District of Columbia branch of Police Court, Judge Casey was "experimenting" with his proposed plan to do away with police testimony in minor cases when the defendant signifies his intention of pleading guilty.

Yesterday was the first time the plan was tried in court. Out of 42 persons charged with one or the other of the two offenses, only 7 pleaded not guilty and sworn testimony was heard. In the other 35 cases Judge Casey sentenced the defendants on their guilty pleas without hearing the policeman's side of the story.

Twenty-two of the defendants were "repeaters" and drew sentences ranging from $10 fines to fines of $50 or 60 days. Five sentences were suspended.

Judge Casey's plan was submitted to the Commissioners last week as a possible way of keeping more patrolmen on beats. The jurist said he believed too much time was being wasted by officers at court.

It is his plan, Casey explained, to have an assistant probation officer check as far as possible with defendants before they are arraigned in court and find out those who desire to plead guilty.

In these cases, it was said, the officers will be allowed to return to his beat and the judge will sentence the person on the plea alone.

Yesterday, however, Judge Casey kept the officers on hand rather than dismiss them, in the event that a defendant changed his mind and pleaded not guilty.

Ice Cream Eating Gunmen Flee Store With $15

Two youthful gunmen confronted Mrs. Mary Becker, 31-year-old clerk, in an ice cream store at 6230 Georgia Avenue Northwest, last night and demanded:

"Okay, open it up, sister—the cash drawer." They had just bought two vanilla ice cream cones.

When Mrs. Becker handed over $15, one of the youthful bandits strode back of the counter and pulled the drawer from its moorings in a search for "the big money."

4 Gunmen Get $5 and Free Ride From Cab Driver

Four men with a gun took a long ride with Cab Driver Edward C. Green, 27, of 709 Massachusetts Avenue Northeast. In Sligo Park woods in nearby Maryland they tied him to a tree and robbed him of $5 and his car.

Green said the men hailed him at Fourteenth and Meridian Streets Northwest and told him to take them to Silver Spring. But when he drove through Sligo Park they forced him to turn into the park, stood him against a tree and searched his pockets. Then he was taped to the trunk and a handkerchief stuck in his mouth. The quartet drove off in the car.

Eight Business Concerns Added To Those With 100% Employe Enrollment

Nearing the end of the second week in the District Red Cross Roll Call, the enrollment stood yesterday at 34,382 persons—a lag behind the enrollment for an equivalent period of time in the 1940 drive, it was announced by General Chairman Edgar Morris.

The drive, begun September 22, will continue to October 20.

Several business concerns were added to those whose entire personnel had enrolled. These were the Maryland Casualty Co., Bank of Commerce and Savings, District Building and Loan Association, Washington Realty, Lincoln National Bank, Brodie & Colbert, Cafritz Co. and Norfolk & Western Railway Co.

The largest enrollment day thus far was yesterday with 7550 memberships, it was announced.

Morris has called a meeting of the Roll Call units for 4:30 p. m. Monday, in an effort to speed up enrollment reports.

Morris believed there are many thousands of memberships which have not been reported to headquarters. The general business group, headed by David E. McCoy, brought in 2022 memberships yesterday for what was called a notable showing. Employes of Woodward & Lothrop comprised the bulk of this showing, it was stated.

300 Hear Speakers Protest Dismissal Of Mrs. Miller

Three hundred persons last night heard speakers protest dismissal of Mrs. Helen Miller from the Department of Labor for alleged Communist activities at a rally in the auditorium of the National Press Club. Sponsor of the meeting was the Washington Committee for Reinstatement of Helen Miller, composed of 26 C. I. O. unions.

Those who spoke, reviewing the case and urging her reinstatement, included Henry Wenning, secretary-treasurer of the C. I. O. State, County and Municipal Workers of America; Eleanor Nelson, national secretary-treasurer of the United Federal Workers of America; Henry Rhine, national U. F. W. A. representative; Oscar Witmer, president of the District council of the U. F. W. A., and Mrs. Miller.

Depositions Sought For Trial of Catoe

Assistant United States Attorney John W. Fihelly left for Charlotte, N. C., last night to take three depositions in the case of Jarvis Catoe, now in District Jail awaiting trial for rape-murder of Mrs. Rose Abramowitz.

The three are defense witnesses, unable to attend the trial. Attorney Fihelly will cross-examine them in Charlotte. Catoe's trial begins October 15.

G. W. Puts Up Fight In Opening Quarter Then Folds in N. Y. Game Under Lights

By a Staff Correspondent

Polo Grounds, New York Oct. 3.—George Washington University's football team, feeble on the attack and inept defensively, labored through a 23-0 beating by Manhattan College tonight before 7,000 New York fans.

Offering stubborn resistance only in a scoreless first quarter, the Colonials yielded a touchdown-per-quarter to Manhattan thereafter, plus a second-period field goal.

Lorenzo Castiglione, squat 165-pound tailback, made Manhattan's attack move, throwing one touchdown pass that climaxed a series of clever passes. In the second half, the versatile Castiglione spear-headed Manhattan's running attack and raced around end for a touchdown.

On the wet field the Colonials were unable to penetrate Manhattan territory in the second half until the last minute of play when Gudmundson reeled off a 20-yard gallop to the Manhattan 30. A bit later, on the last play of the game, Manhattan made its fourth pass interception of the night to halt the G. W. advance.

G. W. U. Threatens First

The Colonials launched the first sustained threat of the game when they moved to a first down on Manhattan's 25-yard line early in the opening quarter, only to bog down.

Manhattan bottled the running plays, featuring Walt Fedora, but Gudmundson returned a kick 20 yards and gained ground through the Manhattan line. Fedora broke through for 5 yards to the Manhattan 20. At this point the Colonials suddenly changed their strategy and went into the air, losing the ball when Gudmundson missed with three passes.

The Jaspers were gaining on the punt exchanges for the remainder of the first quarter with Kiesecker making a 65-yard quick kick, and took the ball to the G. W. 30. Kiesecker fumbled and Picco recovered for G. W. on the Colonials' 30. Manhattan contended the G. W. end had stolen the ball but the referee ruled the play a fumble, Picco was forced to retire from the game at that point with an injured knee.

Passes Lead to Score

Another of Kiesecker's long, quick kicks set G. W. back on its heels at the opening of the second quarter, and the Jaspers gained possession of the ball on the G. W. 40—on Graham's return punt from behind the goal.

Despite two holding penalties of 15 yards each, Manhattan thrust through the air to a touchdown. Lorenzo Castiglione, the New Yorkers' passing ace, threw a flanker to Ulric for one 10-yard gain, and the Manhattans moved to the G. W. 25 on another pass over the middle by Castiglione to Varner, who fumbled after catching the ball, with Hausepohl recovering for Manhattan. Set back by another holding penalty, Castiglione countered with another long pass to Worst for a 13-yard gain and then came the touchdown play. Castiglione completed a fourth successive long pass, this time to Bill Li Volsi on a diagonal heave into the corner of the gridiron. Li Volsi outsprinted Fedora in the secondary defense and carried the ball 10 yards farther to a touchdown on a play that covered 28 yards. Worst missed the kick for the extra point.

After a brief burst into Manhattan territory following the next kick-off when Gudmundson gained 7 yards and Fedora 6 through the middle, G. W. was on the defensive again when Gudmundson's pass aimed at Del Vecchio was intercepted by Tiano and run back 40 yards to the G. W. 40.

Castiglione's 9-yard pass to Worst moved the ball to the G. W. 30 and another 10-yard heave from Castiglione to Varner gained the Jaspers a first down on the 20. When two more passes missed, Worst wobbled a place kick through the posts from 30 yards out, increasing the Manhattan lead to 9-0.

G. W. Stays In Trouble

Any ideas of a G. W. touchdown before the half was over vanished when Pinnow's pass was intercepted by Graham and returned 20 yards to the G. W. 23 before the half-gun sounded.

With the start of the second half, G. W. was again in trouble. McNulty on a short-side reverse, raced 40 yards around right end before Del Vecchio caught him from behind on the G. W. 30. McNulty lobbed a pass to Gausepohl that carried to the G. W. 13 and line plays then moved the Jaspers to a first down on the G. W. 3 where the Colonials made a magnificent stand. Three times they stopped the plunging Kiesecker short of the goal, and on fourth down a lateral from Kiesacker to McNulty that carried the ball over was ruled an illegal forward throw, and G. W. took the ball.

Completely ineffective when in possession of the ball, G. W. was backed up against its own goal late in the third period and yielded the second Manhattan touchdown. Castiglione, turning ball carrier, banged through the G. W. tackles

Jack Wright's Boot For Winning Point In Fourth Quarter Is Wide of Mark

By Anne Hagner

Post Staff Writer

Municipal Stadium, Baltimore, Oct. 3.—Coach Charlie Havens' Western Maryland eleven almost—but not quite—accomplished what its representatives have been unable to do since 1934 by knocking off the University of Maryland but still gave their old rivals a tough night of it as the College Parkers finally tied them, 6 to 6, here tonight.

A human battering ram in the form of Jack Wright, sturdy sophomore tailback, crashed through a surprisingly strong Terror line to score the lone Maryland touchdown, but saw his chance for victory slip away when his kick a moment later for the extra point went wide of its mark.

Wright's scoring, with only six minutes of the game remaining, came after a third-quarter touchdown by the Terrors that must have given new life to Coach Havens, whose squad has been unable to defeat or tie Maryland since he became head coach there in 1934.

The forward march began when Bob Bricker's kick from his own 40 bounced neatly on the eight, then rolled directly to the Maryland goal line and halted like a golfer's straightest putt, half an inch from its mark.

Bernie Ulman's toe, a forceful Maryland weapon against Hampden-Sydney last week, carried the ball to the Terps' 40 and Acting Terror Captain Irvin Biasi caught a long pass from Emanuel Kaplan out of the nowhere or, more literally out of the air, above the 10-yard line. He was brought down on the two-yard stripe.

Biasi Goes Over

After three futile attempts at the line, Biasi finally raced around right end and went over to make the score 6-0. Kaplan's kick for the extra point was wide.

Maryland almost kept clean the 31-year-old record of untied games between the two teams as Mearle Duvall's lateral for a touchdown was disallowed because it came after the whistle blew. Upward of 10,000 fans, making only a slight impression on the rickety stadium's 65,000 seating capacity, screamed according to their respective emotions until it was clear that the score didn't count.

The first half was scoreless for both Terps and Terrors, but started off well for the College Parkers when Maryland took the kickoff and made its way rapidly to the ½-yard line by means of four successive first downs, straight down the field. Rigby was stopped a scant foot from the goal line.

In the second quarter, the Terrapins' Duvall and Rigby advanced from their own 43 to Western Maryland's 47 in two plays. Rigby made a great catch over his shoulder that was almost intercepted by the Terrors' Bricker on Maryland's 40.

On a fourth down with 6 to go Terp Quarterback Bernie Ulman faked a field goal and Barnes raced around for what appeared to be a substantial gain—until he tripped and slid turfward on the 8-yard line.

Rain Halts Series, But Not Fans

Donald or Russo May Face Higbe Or Fitzsimmons In Third Game

BULLETIN

New York, Oct. 3 (AP).—It still was raining here late tonight and the weatherman gave little hope that the third game of the World Series, already delayed a day by showers, could be played tomorrow.

The forecast predicted clouds and light rains for the forenoon tomorrow and showers in the afternoon.

Brooklyn, Oct. 3—In an city gone daft over its Dodgers, the World Series resumes tomorrow. Brooklyn's Bums, even more beloved since they evened the series count with the hated Yankees at one-one, have come home to play this one for the folks.

Only 33,000 in the borough of three million will be able to wedge their way into old-fashioned Ebbets Field, but there is dancing in the streets tonight in anticipation of the show-down with the Yankees.

Brooklyn folks who waited 21 years between World Series games at Ebbets Field discovered at noon today that they must wait 24-hours longer. Baseball Commissioner Landis took a look at what threatened to be a daylong drizzle, and moved the series program back a full day.

The hiatus didn't affect the high hysteria in Brooklyn, though. Substantial citizens paraded side by side with urchins in the streets, bearing banners proclaiming the Dodgers. "Hi, Toots," was accepted greeting to women shoppers as Dodger fans ruled the town. One banner read, "We're not going back to New York," implying that the Dodgers would wind up the series with three straight wins at Ebbets Field.

No Pitching Choice Yet

There was a note of uncertainty concerning the pitching selections of Managers Leo Durocher and Joe McCarthy, however. Both were refusing tonight to go out on a limb with definite pitching choices. Each was reserving the right to make a last-minute change.

"Fitzsimmons or Higbe," declared Durocher, declining to be more definite.

McCarthy was equally uncertain. "Russo or Donald," he said.

Among the betting commissioners, however, there was no such vacillating. "Nine to five against the

ODDS ON YANKS UNCHANGED

Brooklyn, Oct. 3.—At this point in the World Series, the Dodgers may be prose to Flatbush but they are still long shots among the unromantic gentlemen who lay the odds on the series outcome. One will get you two if you still like the Dodgers to beat the Yankees and are correct in your choice.

POVICH

The Dodgers are the people's choice but the coldly commercial gents with an eye to betting profits are freely quoting the Bums at 2 to 1. These were the odds before the series started. At the end of two games they are unchanged despite the Dodgers' second-game comeback.

The bookies' willingness to invite Brooklyn bets at 2 to 1 was summed up by one of the gentry today when he declared himself in this manner: "At the end of two games, the two clubs are even and Joe DiMaggio hasn't made a hit in the series yet. The Dodgers don't figure to keep stopping DiMag. Their pitching isn't that good. The only reason the Yanks aren't two games in front is because Joe Gordon messed up two plays yesterday. He's the greatest infielder in baseball and when the Yankees lose on account of a Gordon error, it's an accident."

One of the reasons DiMaggio has been hitless in the series thus far is because Brooklyn pitchers have been clever enough to keep him from pulling the ball to leftfield. They've been throwing outside pitches that he has been hitting to deep center. But that has been in Yankee Stadium. Two of those centerfield flies DiMaggio hit in the Stadium would have been home runs in Ebbets Field, scene of the series' next three games.

From here in, the Yanks are also apt to be a bit tougher. Nominally a well-behaved club which never felt any urge to get rough on the bases, the Yankees are now fuming at the roughhouse tactics of the Dodgers who have been riding their spikes high. Especially are the Yanks incensed at the treatment the Dodgers have been giving little Phil Rizzuto on plays at second base.

Bombers Promise Retaliation

His big Yankee teammates love that little Yankee shortstop and in the dressing room after yesterday's game they were in an ugly mood. "Both Owen and Reese gave Rizzuto the works on plays at second," declared the usually placid Joe Gordon with some heat. "If they want to play that way, there are some guys on this club who will macerate those Brooks. They haven't been keeping it clean, and it looks like the lid is off."

Judge Landis took steps before the start of the series to avoid any incidents when he lectured both managers about riding from the bench. Not only that but he stationed an alternate umpire in each dugout to stay within earshot and cramp the style of the jockeys in the two camps. Save for a nasty remark made by Lefty Gomez, when the Yanks' former pal, Johnny Allen, went to the mound for Brooklyn late in the first game, there have been no cutting cracks. "I see you've dropped down into cheaper company since you left the Yanks," yelled Gomez to the incoming Allen.

The Yanks feel a superiority over the Dodgers, anyway. Adding flame to that attitude is the manner in which the Brooklyn players whacked up the World Series among themselves. In contrast to the 31 full shares voted by the Yankees, the Brooks voted to cut their pot into only 17 full shares. Thus, actually, the 17 full-share Dodgers will get more out of a losing share of the series than the 31 Yankees will get from a winning share. "Those cheap Bums," the Yankees have been muttering. If the series strife becomes hotter, the Yanks will doubtless have more to say on the subject, and in louder tones.

The Dodgers have been the gambling team of the series thus far. In the opening game, they gambled and lost, twice; when they started Curt Davis in preference to the 22-game winner, Whitlow Wyatt, and when Pee Wee Reese brashly tried to go from second to third on a pop foul. In yesterday's second game, Manager Leo Durocher won a gamble for high stakes.

Durocher Defies Rule—Wins Gamble

The success of Durocher's strategy in the eighth inning is the best answer to its critics, but the Brooklyn manager was defying one of the cardinal rules of the game: Never put the winning run on base. Durocher did just that when, with two out in the eighth and the tying run on second, the Brooks' pilot ordered Wyatt to purposely pass Joe Gordon. A long hit by Phil Rizzuto might have scored both the tying and winning runs, whereas only a home run off Gordon's bat would have licked the Dodgers. But Rizzuto grounded out on the first pitch and there could be no quarrel with Durocher's thinking processes.

The Dodgers typify the best in National League baseball—smart fielding, clever throwing and ambitious base-running, but the Yankees in that respect, are a National League club themselves. Power has been the label of the Yanks down through the years, but down through the years they have been the American League's best fielding, finest running and most spirited ball club. Against the Yankees, the Dodgers have no corner on the zestful play of the series. The Yanks are that sort of a ball club, too, plus power that has habit of exploding all over the premises.

Bogart Beats Skinker, Wins Another Title

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Ralph Bogart wins again.

The 21-year-old youngster stepped into the winner's circle for the fifth time in local major competition this season yesterday afternoon when he received the President's Cup for his Congressional Club Invitation triumph over Earle Skinker.

Three down leaving the fifth hole and apparently doomed to defeat at the hands of his 20-year-old buddy, Bogart pulled himself together, took advantage of Skinker's putting lapse and won on the eighteenth hole, 2 up.

Bogart, winner of the Chevy Chase and Pine Valley Invitations, in addition to this one, the District championship and Grosner pro-amateur, played every hole out and required just 72 strokes, even par, for the final round.

Semifinals Easy

The youngsters easily advanced through the morning semifinals. Bogart was 2 under par and 5 up against Gene Pittman, of the host club, at the turn and went on to win, 4 and 3. Skinker easily disposed of Dick Jennings, the public links champion, 5 and 4, with 2-under-par golf all the way, which left his 3-under par for four rounds.

Bogart, who turned Skinker back in the recent District Amateur semi-finals, was up to his old tricks of wild tee shots in the early stage of the finals. Skinker won the first two holes with pars and after dropping an 8-foot putt to halve the third hole, he birdied the fifth and was 3 up.

Bogart lost a chance to get a hole back when they both 3-putted the sixth green, Bogart missing the last putt. He got one back with a birdie on the eighth, however, and turned the halfway mark 2 down.

Bogart Starts Comeback

It was on the tenth hole that Bogart put on his winning comeback charge against Parker Nolan Thursday and again yesterday the dog-leg par four was an important

'Oh, Where Are Those Hits'—Marse Joe

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 3.—Marse Joe McCarthy, the big-chinned fellow who bosses the New York Yankees, kept his fingers crossed tonight hoping his big guns would start shooting in tomorrow's third game of the World Series with the Brooklyn Dodgers.

"Our trouble," he diagnosed, "is that the club is not hitting. Well, neither are the Dodgers. This kind of a thing is unaccountable. All I am doing is hoping things start to pop tomorrow. My club, I mean. Everybody knows the Yanks are a better hitting outfit than they showed in the first two games.

In Pretty Good Shape

"Russo's been sick," McCarthy explained. "Something he ate, I guess. But Doc Walsh (Robert Walsh, team physician) looked him over today and he was in pretty good shape. This morning, while we were waiting for Judge Landis to decide on the game, Marius told me he was okay again.

While McCarthy spent most of the off day doing one thing and another concerning the series and the club, Leo Durocher, the Brooklyn head man, finally climbed off the merry-go-round. His wife reported he slept like a tired longshoremen for hours.

Jack Wilson Stars As Baylor Wins

Denver, Oct. 3 (AP).—Rangy Jack Wilson turned the scene of a misfortune last year into one of triumph tonight by driving the Baylor Bears of Waco, Texas, to a 14-0 football victory over Denver University.

On the same field where exactly a year ago he was so seriously injured that he spent weeks in a hospital, the 200-pound quarterback scored both touchdowns and place-kicked both conversion points before a crowd of 12,000.

Chisox Beat Cubs Again in City Series

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 3.—The American League White Sox defeated the National League Cubs, 6 to 4, tonight before a crowd of 27,169 to assume a two-game lead in the Chicago City series.

Southpaw Edgar Smith went all the way for the Sox, snuffing out a ninth-inning rally after two runs had scored.

The Sox hammered four Cub pitchers, Vern Olsen, Vallie Eaves, Johnny Schmitz and Charley Root, for ten hits, including four by Billy Knickerbocker and home runs by Taft Wright and Bob Kennedy.

Olsen gave up four runs in the first four innings before giving way to Eaves in the fifth. Schmitz, who took the mound at the start of the seventh, yielded the fifth Sox run and the last came on Wright's eighth-inning circuit blow.

The Cubs nicked Smith for single tallies in the fifth and eighth before putting two hits and two errors together for their last-inning rally. But Smith then settled down and retired the National Leaguers without further damage.

Former Michigan State Grid Star Is Killed

Lansing, Mich., Oct. 3 (AP).—Casimir J. (Casey) Klewicki, 22, of Hamtramck, Mich., former Michigan State College football and baseball star, was killed tonight in an automobile collision near the Lansing city limits.

Klewicki graduated from Michigan State last June. He was a quarterback on the football squad last year and played third base on the baseball team. He also played that position for St. Joseph, of the Michigan State League last summer.

Carnegie Tech Beats Albright Under Lights, 12-0

By International News Service

In the third period, Gantini registered the first Carnegie tally when he went over right guard from the 2-yard stripe after a 10-yard advance by Pash and Philipchuck set up the play.

Johnson drove through left guard from the 3-yard line to score the second touchdown after Philipchuck intercepted a pass by Breen. Matonis failed both times for the extra point.

Market Wise Choice Today In N. Y.'Cap

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 3.—Market Wise, the bargain-counter conqueror of Whirlaway in the Jockey Club Gold Cup, gets a chance to run for some real money tomorrow in the $50,000 New York Handicap at Belmont Park. As for fan interest, however, he'll have to share some of that with Alsab, a 2-year-old that cost only $700 and now is rated just about the best of the juveniles.

Thirteen older horses have been named for the second running of the handicap over 2¼ miles but off Marketwise's triumph in the Gold Cup it's difficult to pick other than the son of Broker's Tip that cost Lou Tufano a mere $1000 nearly a year ago. He closed fast to nip Whirlaway and the handicap is longer by a quarter-mile.

With Basil James slated to handle the reins, Market Wise has been made the 7-to-5 choice. But when it comes to running the distance he'll find a worthy competitor in Mrs. M. Evans' Shot Put, last year's winner who likes 'em long. Shot Put will pick up 126 pounds to Market Wise's 118. William Woodward's Fenelon, failure in the Gold Cup but previous to that victor in the mile and half of the Manhattan Handicap, will carry one more pound than Market Wise.

Alsab, four-length conqueror of Requested in their match race, is the even-money choice to carry the silks of Mrs. Albert Sabath of Chicago home in front in the mile of the $10,000 Champagne Stakes. Requested, owned by B. F. Whitaker, also is in the race along with Mrs. Charles Shipman Payson's and five other 2-year-olds but doesn't figure to turn the tables on Mrs. Sabath's bargain.

Fleet Sophomores Pace Creighton's 18-to-8 Victory

By the Associated Press

Omaha, Oct. 3.—Creighton's fleet sophomore backs, Tony Porto and Tom Dineen, led the Bluejays to an 18-8 football victory over St. Louis University in a Missouri Valley Conference opener tonight.

The Billikens took an early 2-0 lead on a blocked kick, which meant an automatic safety, then T-formation magic cut Dineen loose for 52 yards and a touchdown.

In the third period, Dick Weber's long peg enabled Dick Pfuhl to put St. Louis ahead again with a 44-yard touchdown gain, but Porto came right back with a 29-yard jaunt for the second Creighton score. He cemented the victory with a 55-yard ramble in the fourth.

Temple Downs Stubborn VMI Eleven, 28-13

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Oct. 3.—Temple had its hands full tonight with an unexpectedly stubborn Virginia Military Institute eleven, but the Owls managed to win their second straight football game by beating the Southerners, 28 to 13, before 15,000 at Temple Stadium.

Sparked by triple threat Andy Tomasic, who gained a total 118 yards during the game, and fullback George Sutch, who displayed a terrific ability to hit the line, Temple scored two touchdowns in the first quarter and one in the second and third periods.

V. M. I., hardly given a chance in pre-game dope, tied the score at 7-7 in the first period on a 50-yard drive, but although they scored again in the first half, were unable to cash in on other opportunities. On three different occasions they lost the ball on downs within the Temple 5-yard line, once on the 6-inch stripe.

Altogether V. M. I. made 15 first downs to 12 and was virtually even with Temple in yards gained from all departments with 263 to 289.

Weatherman Wins Another Decision In Little Series

By the Associated Press

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 3.—The weather man won his second straight Little World Series victory today when rain washed out the scheduled meeting between the Columbus Red Birds, American Association champs, and Montreal's International League playoff winners. Last night's contest also was erased by a downpour.

The Red Birds, leading three games to two, will attempt to end the series Saturday night. Should Montreal win Saturday to even the post-season classic, the final game would be played Sunday afternoon.

The Aging Judge Landis Is Only Man Known To Utter a 'Maybe' With Finality His Own

By Bob Considine.

New York, Oct. 3.—The sight of 75-year-old Judge Landis, walking gingerly across the soggy Ebbets Field outfield this morning, with Joe McCarthy and Leo Durocher puffing along at his side, brought home to us once again the doughty old gaffer's utter control over the multi-million dollar baseball industry.

"I have made my decision," the old warrior boomed when the reporters gathered around him respectfully, at the end of his galloping inspection tour. "The game is off until tomorrow," and he clopped off to a waiting cab and was gone, leaving everyone breathless.

His words hardly sound historic, in print. But, even when the judge says something as medicated as "looks like rain," it becomes an ultimatum. It becomes a heavy sentence handed down on a man standing far below the judge's old Federal court bench. He's the only man we've ever known who could say "maybe" with ringing finality. He scorns punctuation, such as we know punctuation. For commas he pokes you in your wishbone with a long accusing forefinger that is as sharp and hard as a pencil. His semicolons are digs in your ribs, and his periods, delivered with a full overhead clout to your knee, leave the average interviewer gunshy for days.

The important men of baseball, moguls that even reporters have trouble seeing, as well as managers like Durocher who have a habit of shutting in or shutting out the press according to their mood, live in physical terror of the old judge. The old boy is pretty terrifying at that, with

17,659 See Titans Swamp Wayne By 54-0 Score

By International News Service

Detroit, Oct. 3.—The University of Detroit Titans tonight romped to a 54-to-0 victory over Wayne University in a football game played before a crowd of 17,659.

Leading 13 to 0 at the half, Detroit unleashed a passing and running attack that garnered 41 points in the last two periods. Titan Halfback Elmer Maderick plunged across for the first score in the initial stanza, threw a 17-yard touchdown pass in the second to Quarterback Art Link and threw two more scoring passes in the third.

Duke-Tennessee, Fordham-S. M. U. Games Hold Spotlight

Blue Devils Have Stern Test; Many Outstanding Games Scheduled Today

By Bill Boni
Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Oct. 3.—Despite opposition from the World Series, the college football campaign swings into high for keeps tomorrow, with the day's major interest provided by the Duke-Tennessee battle at Durham, N. C., and the meeting of Fordham and Southern Methodist at New York's Polo Grounds.

Duke has two big obstacles in the way of an all-winning season, and Tennessee is the first. Fordham, already built up as likely Eastern pace-setter, has a whole series of tough Saturday afternoons coming up, but few shape up as more difficult than this clash with the up-and-coming Mustangs. This holds true particularly since the Ram sophomore backs, upon whom so much will depend, get their first test in a major game.

With very little more evidence to go on than there was a week ago, we submit the following predictions (home teams listed first, probable attendance figures in parentheses):

DUKE-TENNESSEE (50,000)—Knoxville bookies had to give six points to get any bets from Tennessee followers. In spite of the Vols' jinx on Wallace Wade, that's a strong enough tipoff. Duke.

Fordham-S. M. U. (35,000)—Though the Ram line isn't up to the high Fordham par, neither is it made of papier-mache. It will be the finest collection of backs ever collected at Rose Hill. The margin shouldn't be the 30 points Matty Bell was moaning about, but it still should be Fordham's.

TULANE-AUBURN (40,000)—Off that Boston College showing, no choice but Tulane.

STANFORD-U. C. L. A. (40,000)—The Indians opened with a close one, and this may be another. Still, Stanford.

NAVY-WEST VIRGINIA (19,000)—Backing the sailors to spoke West Virginia's reputedly loaded guns.

CORNELL-SYRACUSE (18,000)—The form chart says Syracuse, but watch out.

NOTRE DAME-INDIANA (45,000)—The Hoosiers were vulnerable to Detroit passes, and Notre Dame scored heavily on passes in its opener. Off that, Notre Dame.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA-OHIO STATE (55,000)—Probably too long a trip for a team still absorbing a new system. Southern California.

ALABAMA-MISS. STATE (20,000)—State had a very tough time with Florida. Too tough, in fact. Alabama.

IOWA STATE-NEBRASKA (20,000)—The Rose Bowl losers should be winners here. Nebraska.

MICHIGAN-IOWA (40,000)—A definite edge to Michigan.

NORTHWESTERN - KANSAS STATE (45,000)—Little more than rehearsal for Northwestern.

PENN-HARVARD (40,000)—As difficult a pick as the day presents. Harvard's squad is well seasoned, has a fine back in Franny Lee and a fine end in Loren McKinney. Penn has lost Reagan, a blow to any

The Vikings Score Early (and Often) in Interhigh Opener

Stan Valanos (27), Central High halfback, gets credit for the first points of the 1941 interhigh football season as he scores a touchdown in the first period of the Vikings' 32-7 rout of Wilson yesterday. A 5-yard line buck turned the trick, despite the efforts of Wilson's Dick Schwab (7).

Central Routs Wilson, 32-7, in Interhigh Grid Opener; Eastern and Western Are Beaten

Purple Spoils Raider Debut, 18-7, Behind Fullback Elmer Raba

Western High eleven, 1940 interhigh champion, made a disappointing 1941 debut yesterday by absorbing an 18-to-7 defeat at the hands of Gonzaga at Western Stadium.

Led by the brilliant playing of Elmer Raba, Gonzaga's triple-threat fullback, who set the stage for all of the three Purple scores, the Eye Street school easily overpowered the lighter Western eleven, scoring once in the second period and twice in the third.

The first score was made on a pass from Raba to Halfback Al Lauck. Raba intercepted a Western pass on Western's 35 and got back to the Western's 31. After reaching the 14, Raba started to the right, threw a running, leaping pass to Lauck for the score. His placement was blocked.

A 36-yard pass from Raba to Bill McKay gave Gonzaga the ball on Western's 12-yard line. Ronny Waldron, right halfback, brought 2 yards through center on the next play. Here the cleverest play of the game took place.

It was the second down with 8 yards to go. Quarterback Joe Murphy took the ball from center and after faking it, lateraled the ball to Raba, who continued around right end, shook off three would-be tacklers and went over for the second score. An attempted pass, Raba to Lauck, failed.

A Western fumble and sheer Purple power gave Gonzaga its third touchdown. Gonzaga recovered on the 50-yard line. A lateral from Murphy to Waldron around left end brought 9 yards and the same play with Lauck carrying the ball to the right made six. At this point Raba drifted back and tossed a 29-yard pass to McKay. This advanced the Gonzaga march to the Western six. A plunge by Raba brought the ball to one yard short of pay dirt. Lauck then hit the jackpot over right guard, making the score at this point 18 to 0. Raba's dropkick was diverted.

The thrill-starved Western rooters were not given much to cheer about 'til the final quarter. A pass from Raba, intended for Right Halfback Bernie Nolan, was intercepted by Johnny Boaze, Western center, on his own 20-yard line. Boaze started down the right side of the field, his interference quickly forming in front of him, and convoying him safely the remaining 80 yards down the field. Capt. Kuldell's conversion was good.

3000 See Vikings Display Unexpected Power; Jim Kurz Scores 3 Touchdowns

By Bill Burnett
Post Staff Writer

A "Danger, High Explosives" sign was hung out yesterday at Central High School, where the 1941 interhigh football series was christened before a stunned crowd of 3000 scholastic fans.

Central, a slight choice over Woodrow Wilson in the opener, ground out a 32-7 triumph by way of serving warning on all competition in the annual schoolboy race.

If there was an individual star in the surprisingly decisive victory it was big Jim Kurz, who wasn't expected to play because of an infected foot. He scored three touchdowns, all on line smashes, and generally proved the wisdom of his shift from end last year to the backfield.

Kurz Scores Immediately

Kurz, as a matter of fact, rammed his way through Wilson's line for six points on the first play in which he took part. Going into action early in the second quarter, when a Viking march had bogged down on the 1-yard line, Jim dove across the line with yards to spare.

That gave Central a 12-0 lead, Stan Valanos having spun across from the 5-yard stripe midway in the first stanza, capping a drive of 47 yards. The Vikings scored again in the second period, once in the third and once in the fourth. Wilson's only counter came on the first play after the second-half kickoff, easily stealing the show.

Perfect 65-Yard Play

Charley Saine brought Wilbur Rock's kickoff back to Wilson's 35, and there occurred the day's prize play. Halfback Dick Schwab, whose passes hadn't clicked up to that point, leveled one at Charley Hardison on Central's 30. The latter took the ball in, was tackled by one leg, and before he was downed lateraled to Bill Savin. It was just a trot for Savin to the goal line, ending a 65-yard play. Keith Lamb, rotund reserve, went in and kicked a perfect extra point.

Jack Samperton, Central's place-kicking end, managed for only two points in four tries. Another failure came when Bobby Mess, holding the ball for him, fumbled. Samperton also tried a field goal from the 17 in the second quarter, but it was low.

Backed up to his own 5 by a holding penalty, Wilson's Schwab attempted to kick out on third down. The ball was partially blocked, landed at about the 15, and bounced crazily back to Schwab on the 6. Instead of downing it, he tossed it away and Mike Goldberg, Viking

Anacostia High Triumphs, 18-0, Over Handley

By way of serving notice to the other interhigh elevens, the Anacostia football team trampled the hitherto unbeaten Handley High from Winchester, Va., 18 to 0, yesterday on the locals' field.

Late in the second period Paul Blaine intercepted an enemy pass on the midfield stripe and carried to the 40 before he was downed. After one crack at the line failed to gain, he spun out of a reverse and fired the ball to Dick Faircloth, who garnered it in on the 2 and stepped across to score standing up. Blaine's try for the conversion was low.

Again in the fourth quarter, the Blaine to Faircloth combination clicked for a score. After Eddie Hoffman had penetrated to the visitor's 40 on a 20-yard jaunt through the line, a Blaine aerial found Johnny Penn on the 30 where he was driven out of bounds.

A try at the line failed to gain and on the next play Blaine, a converted blocking back, tossed to Faircloth in the end zone to make the count 12-0. He again missed the extra point.

With only two minutes left to play, Grant Davidson grabbed a Handley pass on the visitors' 35 and then the second team went to work. A 30-yard heave, Davidson to Elliot Day carried to the 5 and two quick plunges at the line made the score 18-0, with Davidson going over.

White Tide Bows, 24-0, to J. Marshall Last-Half Scoring

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Oct. 3.—Battling on even terms throughout the first half, John Marshall High School's football team staged a comeback in the third and fourth periods to whip Eastern High School of Washington, D. C., 24 to 0, here today.

It was the twelfth consecutive victory by Coach Dick Esleeck's Justices without defeat, tie or being scored on.

Fullback Ed Saxby sparked the second-half drive that netted John Marshall two touchdowns each in the third and fourth periods, scoring the first on a fake reverse from his own 47-yard line. Tearing through a gaping hole in the center of the visitors' line, Saxby cut to the sidelines on the right and outdistanced the Eastern secondary, scoring standing up.

In the first half Eastern threatened to score on a well-protected screen pass from Herbie Adams to Harry Bond, that carried 53 yards to the Justices' 11. Faking a kick, Adams passed to Wingback Bond in the flat, after five Eastern linemen allowed the Justice line to break through and had moved over to screen their passer. Hartley Smith, John Marshall end, overtook Bond from behind and brought him down.

John Marshall's second tally followed close on the first, the Justices marching from their own 49. Bobby McWhorter, pass specialist, entered the game and on the first play arched a perfect pass to John Marshall's Tippy Duling, who took it on the 8 and crossed the goal line unmolested.

Navy Faces Stiff Test Against W. Va.

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 3.—Determined to repeat its 1917 upset over the Middies, West Virginia's rugged pigskin outfit is expected to give Navy its first real test of the season at 2:30 p. m. tomorrow in Thompson Stadium.

The hard-hitting mountaineers, celebrating their fiftieth anniversary of football, are confident despite the sailors' 34 to 0 triumph over William and Mary last Saturday.

Navy is the favorite, however, packing more weight and better reserve corps. Both institutions use a two-team system but West Virginia has largely a sophomore combination while the Middies boast veterans.

The Morgantown team averages about 180 pounds to Navy's 193, but the West Virginians are rugged and well-drilled. Under Bill Kern, the visitors use a modified form of the Pittsburgh system. Kern was an assistant to Jock Sutherland at Pittsburgh.

The West Virginians will have to watch Barnacle Bill Busik, Navy's ace back, and Howie Clark, Sammy Boothe, Alan Cameron and Sherry Werner. And they'll know Bill Chewning and Gene Flathmann, big Middie tackles, are in the ball game.

West Virginia.	Position.	Navy
Clark	L.E.	Froude
Harris	L.T.	Flathmann

Capacity Crowd to See Hoyas Play V. P. I.

Georgetown Minus Barrett, Not to Start Lemke and Pavich; Homecoming Game

By Jack Munhall
Post Staff Writer

Roanoke, Va., Oct. 3.—Three of the four players who accounted for all the points in Georgetown's 16-6 opening victory over Mississippi last week will be missing from the lineup tomorrow when the Hoyas provide the opposition for V. P. I.'s homecoming at Miles Stadium, Blacksburg.

Quarterback John Barrett, who started the Hoyas off on their upset of the Rebels with a 24-yard field goal, has been lost by an appendectomy and his place will be taken by Eddie Agnew. Ends Art Lemk and Chrid Pavich, who each scored one touchdown against Ole Miss., will be supplanted in the first string lineup by Bob Duffey and Al Lujack.

Georgetown Coach Jack Haggerty declared there was no significance in the benching of Lemke and Pavich, but that it was being done because he felt that Duffey and Lujack needed seasoning for tougher games to follow.

Bulvin to Start

V. M. I. officials today predicted one of the largest crowds in year for Georgetown's first invasion of the Keydets' rolling campus, with a capacity of 9000 or 10,000 fans expected.

The Gobblers have been pointing for this one and enthusiasm was high on the campus which was sprinkled with signs and other diagrams belittling the Hoyas. Not only is V. M. I. determined to come through with a victory in honor of returning alumni, but it also is impatient to wipe out the stigma of last week's crushing defeat by Kentucky. The Gobblers, after opening their season with a decisive triumph over Catawba, ran into plenty of trouble with Kentucky's Wildcats and bowed, 37-14.

Hoyas Hold Margin

The Gobblers will spot Georgetown a seven-pound weight advantage both in the line and in the backfield, with the Hoyas averaging 197 and 183 to 190 and 177, respectively.

Georgetown today will be trying a grand experiment when it starts Agnew at quarterback, for it will mark the first time the 168-pound junior has ever played out of tailback. Agnew was being groomed as Barrett's understudy during fall practice and will benefit from experience under fire in the second Georgetown-Navy scrimmage. That hour workout, however, was the only time Agnew has called signals for the Hoyas, or anybody else.

Cavaliers Seek Third Straight In Yale Game

By the Associated Press

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 3.—A Yale football team trying to snap back from the worst season in the Elis' long gridiron history goes to the post tomorrow against a Virginia eleven which, its coach said today, is "definitely better" than the club that turned back the Bulldogs, 19-14, in last year's opener.

This defeat was one of the seven Yale suffered while turning in only a single victory.

The task of stopping Capt. Bill Dudley, 19-year-old whirling dervish in the Virginia backfield, goes to a Yale line composed mainly of holdovers from last year. It will be their first game of the year, and they will be going against a team that already has scored two impressive shut-outs.

Spike Nelson, starting his first game as Yale's head coach, is depending on one sophomore in the backfield, Ed Taylor, on two veterans in Jigger Harrison and Hovey Seymour, who is now being used as a blocker instead of a runner, and on Chuck Willoughby, who showed promise in some of the late 1940 games.

Coach Frank Murray, of the Cavaliers, was not tinkering with the line-up that has rolled over Hampden-Sydney and Lafayette.

Both elevens had short workouts in the rain in the bowl this afternoon. Underdog Yale looked for a crowd of 25,000 to be on hand for the 2 p. m. kickoff.

Coolidge Gains First Football Victory, 7 to 6

The tingling satisfaction of a football victory belonged to Calvin Coolidge High rooters for the first time yesterday when the first team in their school's history tripped National Traing School, 7-6, on the Coolidge gridiron.

Setting the stage on the last play of the first quarter, Coolidge warriors overcame a 6-0 deficit on the opening play of the second. Halfback Dick Beebe plunged over from the 4-yard line, and Irving Jacobson neatly drop-kicked the extra point.

Earlier the Trainers had jumped into a lead when a Coolidge punt had bounded backward and rolled out on the Colt 21. In short trips, N. T. S. moved to the 2-yard marker, and "Porky" Lofty spear-headed the march with a power drive over the goal.

National Training School made one more bid to regain the lead before the half, reaching Coolidge's 1-yard line. There, however, the whistle saved the hosts. The second half was a nip-and-tuck struggle, with neither team making a serious threat.

Blaik Names Army Line-up For Citadel

By the Associated Press

West Point, N. Y., Oct. 3.—Earl Blaik, on the eve of his debut as Army's first civilian head coach in 30 years, today named six seniors and five juniors on the team he plans to start against The Citadel tomorrow.

Only one sophomore was given a chance of breaking into the line-up so long as the going remains tough. He is lanky Ralph Will, of Santa Fe, N. Mex., a third-string plebe fullback last year. Hill is substitute for Hank Mazur, Army's leading ground gainer and scorer last season.

Tomorrow's contest will be the second between the two teams in Army's 52 years of gridiron history. In 1934 the Cadets swamped the South Carolinians, 34-0. Citadel crushed High Point, 45-0, in its first game of the season two weeks ago.

Royal Echo, $73.60 Shot, Runs Second

2 Long Shots Wage Battle Down Stretch To Surprise Talent; George Lamaze Third

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Laurel, Md., Oct. 3.—Every horse player in the country who has a "Mc" connected with his name is probably kicking himself tonight for not playing a 3-year-old filly tagged Mack's Dream at this track today. The daughter of Night Flyer and Queen Mother turned in by far the biggest upset of the meeting when she won by a length in the fourth race and caused the mutuel department to display an across-the-board price of $92.60, $36 and $14.90.

But for the late stretch drive of this filly, the win mutuel would have been even greater, for the second horse was Royal Echo, with odds to win of 130-1 on her. Her place price was a juicy $73.60 and her show mutuel $26.30. Just to make the long-shot picture complete, George Lamaze ran third and paid $10 for show.

Carrying only 101 pounds in the person of Apprentice Jockey J. Breen, Mack's Dream was snugged along closest to the pace of Royal Echo. The favorite players smiled as the pair of long shots struggled for the pace. They believed that Rehearsal or Fogoso would come on to take the money. However, to the surprise of the customers, Mack's Dream and Royal Echo staged their struggle right to the wire, with even George Lamaze outgaming Rehearsal in the closing drive.

$43.70 Daily Double

Favorites were chased out of the money circle again in the sixth race, the Brookside Purse and the best offering on the card. In a blanket finish, White Hall Plantation's Chaldar closed a neck in front of Little Acorn, which headed Air Master out of the place award. The winner paid $19.

A long shot and a favorite teamed to produce a $43.70 pay-off in the daily double. Note, owned by George Perry, the Marlboro Hotel manager, won the first race by a neck in a thrilling finish that saw First Water second, and Miss Sarita, the favorite, third. Note, operating in a field of 12 2-year-olds, paid $19.30 in his own right.

Mrs. R. H. Heighe's Pony Ballet put the finishing touches on the double. The 2-year-old daughter of Theatrical won as Jockey Ken McCombs choose. She Dast was second behind the easy winner, with Prince Govans in third position. Pony Ballet paid $5.10.

G. M. to Lend Idle Workers To Arms Plants

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Oct. 3.—A plan to protect the seniority of workers made temporarily idle by the curtailment of non-defense production and to reduce migration of workers between plants and communities pending their absorption into armament work was announced today by General Motors Corporation.

The plan was drafted at a meeting of officials of the corporation and representatives of the United Automobile Workers (C.I.O.) and the Office of Production Management which is controlling the volume of non-defense work and recently ordered a sharp curtailment of passenger automobile output. Besides protecting General Motors workers, it is designed, according to C. E. Wilson, corporation president, also to expedite defense work.

No Loss of Seniority

It provides, in effect, for "loaning" workers engaged in non-defense tasks to companies in need of skilled and semi-skilled labor for armament work without loss of seniority; for cooperation with the U.A.W.-C.I.O. in determining qualifications for transfer to defense assignments; for defense work training; for preference to employes in local industries over workers from other localities; and specifies conditions under which employes "loaned" or laid off will be recalled to their original employer for defense assignments.

Another stipulation provides that "skilled tradesmen, partically employed or employed at occupations other than their trade or its equivalent in defense usefulness, will be released upon their request, with protection of their seniority rights, for full-time defense work (40 hours per week) at their trade."

While the stipulations technically apply to only those plants where the U.A.W.-C.I.O. has bargaining rights, the announcement said the corporation "expects the same provisions to be satisfactory to employes in all plants."

250,000 Employes

General Motors currently has $1,200,000,000 in defense contracts and employs about 250,000 factory workers in its plants throughout the country.

In a statement today Wilson said: "General Motors Corporation is substantially on schedule with all defense projects and importantly ahead of schedule on many of them. We are doing everything we can to help speed them up and employ more people. However, to avoid laying off thousands of employes the corporation must have more defense projects and orders."

General Motors, he added, "has about 8 per cent of the mechanical goods manufacturing capacity of the country. . . . We do not yet have our proportion of the defense load and are more than willing to undertake additional business."

The Outlook

By Merryle S. Rukeyser, Post Special Writer

Competent Managers Have Abiding Faith In Quality, Well-Paid Labor, Plain Honesty

The chiseler, who skimps on quality and cuts corners, sacrifices long-term good will for immediate gains and inevitably is on the road to ultimate failure when his malpractices catch up with him.

On the other hand, competent managers of enduring companies have an abiding faith in quality products, well-paid labor and plain honesty with customers.

The late Edward H. Cornish, who was long chief executive of the National Lead Co., used to tell his stockholders that he preferred to pay workers a little more than the going rate in the districts in which the company operated.

For example, the anti-chiseling doctrine is expounded by Arthur W. Page, vice president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., in his new book on the Bell System, in which he concludes: "Investing well for the future means getting the best personnel, the best materials, the best credit. The best is usually higher priced but less costly than poor credit, poor personnel and poor materials. The theory is to pay fairly for quality and get it, because quality well managed means ultimate economy. That is the long view.

A hit-and-run management with a short view can make immediate savings by chiseling on the cost of credit, by chiseling on wages and salaries and chiseling on materials and margins of safety in plant operation and cutting down on the staff work and research—the men whose job it is to work for improvement. But such immediate savings will cost heavily in the long run.

"It is essential to the fulfillment of the Bell System policies to pay good wages and salaries, to provide good working conditions, vacations, pensions, sick benefits and the like—essential that everyone be given the maximum possible outlet for his brains and energies that the business affords. All this is a part of making an organization that will be effective in producing long-range improvement and economy."

Mr. Page has selected a propitious occasion for setting forth within the two covers of a book the operating procedure and philosophy of a representative example of the modern corporation. The realities are interesting in contrast with the contrary assumptions and allegations of business-baiting politicians and academic critics.

Moreover, the Page study delineates the philosophy of private enterprise in contradistinction to prevailing trends toward State socialism and bureaucratic economic planning.

As the years run on, the older and better established corporations develop a continuity which makes them significant social institutions—worthy of unbiased study by all students of our contemporary business civilization.

Lumber Production Increases Slightly

By the Associated Press

The National Lumber Manufacturers Association reported yesterday that lumber production for the week ended September 27 stood at 127 per cent of the average of the corresponding week 1935-39, and shipments 126 per cent.

Production totaled 288,031,000 feet, which was just slightly greater than in the previous week, and 8 per cent greater than the corresponding week a year ago.

Shipments aggregated 288,963,000 feet, which was 3 per cent less than the previous week, and 3 per cent less than last year's corresponding week.

Orders booked were for 269,774,000 feet, which was 4 per cent less than the previous week, and 8 per cent less than the corresponding week last year.

New York Cotton

New York, Oct. 3 (AP).—Cotton futures ssazed during most of the trading session today under the impact of spot house and speculative selling, then bounced back near the close on buying which followed reports of heavy rainfall in north central Texas.

Closing quotations on October cotton were 6 cents a bale lower, while other months ranged from 20 cents lower to 5 cents higher.

The disparity in October was the result of late selling orders, which failed to interest buyers who previously had been active. The October contract will expire at noon October 17.

Trade reports said one firm bought around 30,000 bales of October delivery cotton, at the same time selling a like amount for delivery in December. Another spot interest was on the opposite side in the transactions. December contracts were quoted $1.15 a bale higher than October at the time.

Port receipts Thursday, 27,034 bales; port stocks, 3,189,095.

'Beat the Tax' Buying Hits Yule Levels

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 3.—Retail trade attained peak levels this week as buyers rushed to make purchases before the new Federal taxes on a wide variety of goods became effective Wednesday, Dun & Bradstreet said today in the weekly review of business.

"The wave of 'beat the tax' buying carried sales to Christmas levels while gains over a year ago were among the widest recorded," the agency said. "Consumer interest first centered upon the items subject to the retail tax but shortly spread to merchandise affected by manufacturing lines and eventually developed into a general buying rush. Weather that was more seasonal contributed to volume gains by spurring demand for fall goods, particularly men's top coats and heavier furnishings.

"Pre-tax buying was conspicuous in cosmetics, cameras, furs, jewelry, liquor and sporting goods lines. Sales volumes over four and five times as large as those of a year ago were reported frequently."

The agency estimated the gains over a year ago for the country as a whole was from 23 to 33 per cent, one of the best advances of the year. In the major regions the percentage gain over 1940 was: New England, 25 to 33; South, 28 to 35; Southwest, 25 to 30; Middle West, 20 to 25; Northwest, 18 to 22; East, 25 to 30; and Pacific Coast, 30 to 35.

Wholesale market activity was rather low, the report found, retailers showed a tendency to curtail forward buying. Slow deliveries and difficuly in obtaining goods likewise restricted turnover.

Missouri Adjourns Fire Insurance Hearings

Chicago, Oct. 3 (AP).—The State of Missouri has adjourned hearings until November 24 in its antitrust suit to bar 123 stock fire insurance companies from operating in the State.

During a three-week session which opened September 15 and closed last night, Attorney General Roy McKittrick of Missouri presented more than 400 exhibits, consisting mainly of financial records of insurance rate bureaus, minutes of the subscribers actuarial committee, and insurance trade journal articles.

McKittrick said he was trying to prove that stock fire insurance companies, through intercompany organizations, conspired to control insurance rates.

Week's Estimated Output Of Autos Declines

Detroit, Oct. 3 (AP).—Ward's Reports, Inc., estimated today that car and truck production this week would total 76,820 units compared with a revised volume of 77,035 last week. A year ago at this time, when the industry was operating without ceiling limits, output totaled 105,153 vehicles.

The survey said that labor difficulties that closed some factories were responsible for failure of the industry to surpass last week's total. It added that some slight rise may develop next week, but said that no great advances were likely to develop between now and the end of the year.

U. S. Purchases Boost Cheese to 1928 Levels

Chicago, Oct. 3 (AP).—Cheese prices rose to the highest levels since 1928 on the Wisconsin Cheese Exchange at Plymouth, Wis., today as the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation purchased 51 carloads, the Agricultural Marketing Service reported.

Federal purchases were for Twins and Cheddars at 23¼ cents a pound, up ¼ cent. Daisies and Longhorns also gained ¼ cent to 24 cents. All classes were at new 13-year peaks.

Sugar Futures

New York, Oct. 3 (AP).—Domestic sugar futures closed 8 points lower to 2 higher today in restricted trading, which followed exchange announcement that trading was suspended in deliveries beyond July, 1942, most distant active month. Sales were 250 tons.

Rising Trends Still Prevail In BondMarket

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 3.—Rising trends prevailed in the Bond Market again today with Rails and Industrials furnishing most strong spots.

U. S. Governments turned soft on announcement the Treasury would borrow between $1,000,000,000 and $1,250,000,000 next week to pay current operating expenses. The suddenness of the announcement and the size of the contemplated transaction was something of a shock. Most of the day's selling was described as of professional origin—from traders, dealers, etc.

Final quotations over the counter ranged from 2/32 to more than a quarter point lower. Taxable issues offered less resistance than the tax exempts and the long termers yielded more ground than mediums and short maturities.

Corporate issues ahead fractions to a point or more included Nickel Plate 3½s at 97⅛, New Haven 4½s at 29, International Mercantile Marine 6s at 90¼, Commercial Mackay Income 4s at 54, Third Avenue adjustment 5s at 16½, Missouri Pacific 5s at 28¼ and St. Louis-San Francisco 4½s at 15½.

In the losing group were Detroit Edison 3s, Laclede Gas 5½s, Western Maryland 4s and Wabash first 5s.

Foreign dollar issued followed a relatively narrow path. Panama 5s bounded up 2⅝ to 67⅜ and Sydney 5½s gained 3 at 78. Sao Paulo stamped 7s and Denmark 6s were among the losers.

Total sales of $8,316,000, par value, compared with $9,023,700 on Thursday. The Associated Press average of 20 Rails added .3 of a point on top of the same gain the day before. Other groups were either unchanged or a shade higher.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Oct. 3 (AP).—A wide-open break in soybean prices late in the session today helped to upset the entire grain market and blackboard quotations of all cereals were marked down a cent or more in some cases.

Beans tumbled 8 cents a bushel, the maximum loss permitted in one session, but recovered part of the downturn before the close. With producers preparing to enter the harvest period in full swing, and thus watching Chicago prices closely, the market demonstrated unusual weakness, which producers blamed largely on the impending harvest and lower prices for soybean oil and meal and weakness of cottonseed oil and lard, competitive products. When prices began to slide, numerous stop-loss orders were forced into execution, which accelerated the downturn. Late short covering contributed to the rally.

Some selling of wheat was based on reports of scattered sales of 1940 grain held by the Commodity Credit Corporation, but these have been mostly for export. Wheat closed ¾ to 1¼ lower than yesterday. December, 1.21⅛@1.21⅜; May, 1.26⅝@1.26½. Corn was ⅜ to 1¼ down, December, 80⅞@80¾; May, 86@85⅞; oats, ½ to 1 down; rye, 1 to 1¼ off, and soybeans, 3¾ to 7¼ lower.

The extreme break carried December beans down to a low of 1.70, but the close was 1.71⅛@1.72. The price hit a peak of 1.97½ on September 12.

Ford Raises Prices for '42 On Partial List

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Oct. 3.—The Ford Motor Co. gave out today a partial price schedule for its 1942 model automobiles, listing what it described as "Detroit suggested retail prices" for the various models equipped with the Ford six-cylinder engine.

The prices, exclusive of distribution and delivery charges, and Federal, State and other taxes, range from $665 for the three-passenger special coupe, to $1080 for the super de luxe convertible club coupe. The de luxe model four-door sedan is listed at $875 and the super de luxe four door sedan model at $920.

The announcement said that prices for the V-8 engine models are slightly higher. When the six-cylinder model was announced a few months ago the price differential was shown to be $15.

Last year's prices for the eight-cylinder models, at Detroit, exclusive of taxes, ranged from $665 for the special coupe to $905 for the super de luxe club convertible. The four door de luxe model sedan was listed last year at $775 and the four door super de luxe model sedan at $820.

Ford's "Detroit suggested retail prices" for its Mercury line, showing a range from $995 for the three-passenger coupe to $1215 for the club convertible, exclusive of distribution and delivery charges and taxes. The town sedan, four door model, is listed at $1065.

Mercury prices last year ranged from $885 for the coupe to $1070 for the club convertible, with the town sedan, four door model listed at $960.

Rectified Spirits Output Double That of 1940

By the Associated Press

Production of rectified spirits rose in August to 5,789,467 proof gallons, the Treasury reports. This was double the 2,389,183 total of the similar month last year.

This was in line with recent Treasury reports that distillers were getting beverage operations out of the way to prepare to devote large parts of their capacity to producing alcohol for the defense program.

Ethyl Alcohol Output Up

Output of ethyl alcohol in August was 34,299,071 proof gallons, compared with 24,094,281 in August, 1940, according to the Treasury.

'Skins Engage In Stiff Drill For Dodgers

Coach Ray Flaherty promised a performance "at least a third better than last Sunday" as he put the Redskins through an unusually heavy workout yesterday at Griffith Stadium in preparation for a very important visit from the Brooklyn Dodgers tomorrow.

The boys worked hard for an hour and three-quarters, in contrast to a usual light drill of a little more than an hour only two days before game time. They were still drilling against that Dodger offense and that dangerous reverse combination of Ace Parker to Merlyn Condid, the ex-Steeler, from which can come either a pass or run.

With the exception of a few squad members shaking off the final stages of heavy colds, the 33 Redskins are ready to a man for Jock Sutherland's boys, led by Duke's great Ace Parker. Thirty men saw action in the loss to the Giants last week, only Rookie Blacks, Jack Banta, Ken Dow and Al Kreuger missing the line-up at one time or another.

New Line-Up to Start

Flaherty, who saw the Dodgers beat the Eagles last Saturday night, figures they are as good, if not better, than the Giants, but with a real test under the belt he feels the Redskins are ready and will pull through. "We missed a lot of assignments last week and had other first-game troubles that won't happen again," he said. He is not quite set on his starting line-up, but it will be vastly different from the one which started against the Giants.

The ticket sale was not up to last week's pregame proportions, but the crowd will doubtless tax the 35,500 capacity of Griffith Stadium by kickoff time at 2:30 p. m. Some 8,000 tickets remained unsold last night at the Redskin office, in all sections of the park except the upper grandstand. The office will remain open tonight and the remainder of the seats will go on sale tomorrow morning at the stadium. The Dodger game will be the 'Skins' last home game until October 26, as they have out-of-town engagements with the Steelers and Eagles before returning home against the Cleveland Rams.

Workout Today

The 'Skins have only a light workout on tap this morning while the Dodgers will take a final drill on their home field before leaving for this city. They will arrive at 5:30 p. m. and will be quartered at the Willard Hotel.

General Manager Jack Espey promises a surprise or two in the way of entertainment in addition to a carry-over from last week's lavish pre-game and half-time attractions. In addition the Brooklyn band of 75 pieces will be on hand and will share the field at half-time with the 110-piece Redskin music makers.

Coach Jock Sutherland has been spending a busy week with the Dodgers on defense, according to Brooklyn reports, Flaherty has Parker, Condit, Pug Manders and that Dodger line starring Bruiser Kinard and Perry Schwartz, both all-league to worry over but think of Sutherland.

Has Worries Too

He has Sammy Baugh, for whom there is scarcely a defense. Dick Todd, Andy Farkas, and the new Frank Filchock, who was good for more than 100 yards in two sensational plays last week, on his mind. Plus the 13 Redskin rookies and a line which figures to be better, starring Wee Willie Wilkin.

Tomorrow's Dodger tilt will probably be the most important second-league game in the 'Skins' five years here. A defeat will put them 2½ games back of the Dodgers, and likely the Giants, who are heavy favorites over the Steelers. Then the Redskins have the Packers and Bears ahead.

The odds makers yesterday offered the same quotations of a week ago. You get 7 to 5 if you like the Redskins but must give 8 to 5 if you wager on the Dodgers.

Sager Stars, Landon Beats Balt. Friends

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Oct. 3.—Landon School of Washington—and principally the accurate eye and arm of Quarterback Sager—defeated Friends School, Baltimore, 13-0, today.

Passes from Sager accounted for all Landon scoring.

Sager set up both touchdowns same way, driving from 40-yard line to 15, then chucking unerring passes.

Dorrell and Wills Added to Uline Boxing Program

Artie Dorrell, a stablemate of Chalky Wright, has been signed for a 10-rounder with Frankie Wills, local welterweight, on the Wright-Leo Rodak card, October 14, at Uline Arena. Matchmaker Johnny Attell announced yesterday.

Attell also stated he was working on a Billy Banks-Joey Archibald fight. He expects to contact Al Weill, manager of Archibald, in New York to close out the match today.

Two other 10-round fights will complete the show, the opener of the winter season at Uline.

Wright and Rodak are expected to report here next week. Wright lost a close decision to Joe Peralto in Wilkes-Barre Friday night in a non-title bout.

Don't Smash Your Radio—Blame WOL

If you hear something on your radio Sunday afternoon that sounds like "There goes Farkas with an end run around first base' or get the impression that the Dodgers are playing both the Redskins and the Yankees at the same time, don't blame it on either the heat or the humidity.

It's all WOL's fault for booking two ball games for the same afternoon—the Yankee-Dodgers World Series game from Brooklyn, starting at 1:30, and the Redskins-Dodgers (football Dodgers) grid game at Griffith Stadium, starting at 2:30.

Since the World Series game starts first, it will be broadcast in full. Listeners will be kept informed of the progress of the Redskins by bulletins between innings of the baseball game. Then, just as soon as the series game ends, Russ Hodger' broadcast from the Redskins game will go on the air, with a summary of what's happened and the play-by-play from then on.

Walter Haight, of The Post staff, will be there to help out on the between-the-halves broadcast — if there's time for one. The Redskins game broadcast is sponsored by the P. J. Nee Co., with the cooperation of The Washington Post.

Acacia Mutual Bowlers Open At Arcadia

The Acacia Mutual League opened last night at Arcadia with President William Montgomery rolling out the first ball. The women were led by Miss Churchman, R. Montgomery's team, with a 124 high single, while C. Freeman, W. Montgomery's quintet, led the men with his 150 game and 393 set.

FORT DAVIS

Dick Lauxman and Pendleton combined to lead the Western Electric League at Fort Davis with 137 and 365, respectively, while Margaret Parson and Pauline Berger led the ladies, the first with a 101 game and the latter with a 286 set. The Stumblebums had 544 for high team game while a 1585 score took top set for the Whirlwinds.

PETWORTH

Fitzgerald, York Restaurant, sparked a sweep over Randolph Grill with his 153 game and 408 set, but Nick Kerluk, Sellers Plumbing, divided honors with a 148 single and 408 effort, in turn leading his team to three wins over Petworth. The Sollers team leads the Petworth League with 11 wins against but one loss.

ICE PALACE

The Automotive League at the Ice Palace found Furman, Cones, Emerson & Orme's Service, tops for game with a 155 count, while Johnny Anderson led for the set with 428, pacing his team to wins that put them on top of the league with 12-3. Emerson & Orme Servce took high team game with 638 and currently are deadlocked for second position with Trew Motor.

QUEEN PIN

Sections D and F of the Catholic League rolling at Queen Pin had Sam Italiano, St. Peter's No. 1, as leader of the former with 149 and 364, alding his mates to high team game of 562. St. Joseph won set honors with 1632. In Section F, Pat McKivigan, St. Peter's No. 1, had high single of 135, while Caul Del Borrell's 345 set was aiding his St. Joseph's No. 2 lads to team highs of 557 and 1543.

Mary Jones, Family Food Stores, and Mary Fike, Brinkley's, led the Southeast, Mixed League at Queen Pin with highs of 118 and 318, respectively, while El Gelb, Embassy Food, sparked a two-game win over Darling Dress Shop by topping the men with 159 and 381. Brinkley's had 355 for high team game and Family Food took honors with 991, also taking three from Quality Shop. Teams of his league have but three members.

Eagles Face Susquehanna In D. C. Debut

Unveiling ceremonies for what is expected to be the best American University football team in history take place at Woodrow Wilson High stadium today, when the Eagles square off with Susquehanna University at 2:30.

No matter what amount of strength Coach Staff Cassell can muster in his 1941 lub, he doesn't expect a pushover in the Crusaders of Susquehanna. Coached by Alonzo Stagg, jr., the Crusaders lost their opener to Buffalo University, but back of that loss was an undefeated season last year. Many rough edges evident in the first game have been polished off with strenuous drills this week.

Minor injuries have plagued the Eagles to date, but most of them are healed now. The Eagles will take the field at almost top strength. Susquehanna, too, has suffered a few injuries, the chief to Phil Boccelli, tackle, and George Bass, end. The scrappy pair will probably remain inactive throughout.

Mrs. Kreuzburg, Mrs. Platt Win Golf Tourneys

A birdie two on the seventeenth hole helped Mrs. Richard Kreuzburg retain her women's club championship yesterday at Kenwood, while Mrs. Landra Platt came through as expected in the Chevy Chase finals to conclude the club title tourneys for the fair sex.

Mrs. Kreuzburg and Mrs. Woodlief Thomas were all even at the ninth hole of the Kenwood finals and were still square after 16 holes of a nip-and-tuck match. Mrs. Kreuzburg then holed a 15-footer on the seventeenth green for a birdie deuce and won the eighteenth with a five for the match, 2 up.

The winner was also medalist in the Kenwood play. She received the Noah Pomeroy Cup.

At Chevy Chase, Mrs. Platt, medalist and favorite who had been winning matches all week by one-sided margins, was pressed by Mrs. Arnold Willcox before winning, 4 and 2. Mrs. Platt was 2 up at the turn, increased the margin to 3 by the fifteenth hole and won the sixteenth for the match.

Mrs. W. F. Tompkins won the consolation at Chevy Chase over Mrs. J. C. White, 3 and 2.

Kenwood's varied first flight consolation finals were: Mrs. H. W. Bashore over Mrs. W. L. Weible, 5 and 4; Mrs. S. T. DeLaMater over Mrs. John Holland, 3 and 2, and Lois Gladding over Mrs. A. A. Morrill, 2 up.

Earlier in the week Mrs. W. R. Stokes at Manor, Mrs. T. O. Brandon at Columbia, Mrs. Ed Widmayer at Argyle and Mrs. N. F. Hollander at Bannockburn had won their respective club crowns. Other titles were decided earlier in the season.

St. Alban's Bows, 20-12, To St. Paul

Baltimore, Oct. 3.—St. Paul's of Baltimore trounced St. Alban's of Washington, 20 to 12, today, avenging the defeat last year.

The Washingtonians took the offense in the opening minutes, recovering St. Paul's fumble on the kick-off on the Baltimore team's 30 and going for a touchdown on a series of passes.

St. Paul's took the next kick for touchdown on a sustained drive, the last play being a 10-yard sweep by Dick Donohue. Don Galloway converted.

The Washingtonians, late in first quarter, recovered a fumble on St. Paul's 25, Bondy passed to Trimble on 1-yard, and then Bondy plunged over on the next play.

St. Paul's tallied again in the second quarter on a pass from Greene on 40 to George Mitchell in the end zone and clinched game with 70-yard drive in the final period, with Andy Anderson scoring on a reverse from the 12. Galloway converted.

G. W. High Wins Over Lane, 15 to 0

Special Dispatch to The Post

Alexandria, Va., Oct. 3.—Performing without the services of their two most outstanding offensive threats, George Washington High School gridmen grabbed every break that came their way to defeat an aggressive Lane High School eleven of Charlottesville, 15-0, in their opening Virginia Class Conference game here tonight. About 3500 fans saw the Presidents record their first conference victory since they defeated the Charlottesville aggregation, 13-0, almost one year ago tonight.

The Alexandrians were credited with two points when the game was only two minutes old as the result of a bad Lane pass that bounded out of the end zone for an automatic safety. In the second quarter they added six points to their margin when Noble Stewart passed 27 yards to Curtis Kirby for a touchdown. In the final period they came up with another touchdown pass and added the extra point for good measure.

The G. W. safety came soon after the opening kickoff when Campbell attempted to punt from his own 10-yard line, but the snapback from center soared over his head and out of the end zone. In the second quarter it was a poor Lane kick that gave the Presidents their scoring chance and it took them just two plays to score after taking the ball over on the visitors' 16-yard line.

Dalton Dove, Kirby Stewart and Foltz sparked the G. W. attack, while Acting Capt. Henry Grimm stood out on defense. Lane turned up with a trio of stellar running backs in Kindred, Holland and Campbell.

Grin and Bear It

By Lichty

"You oughta listen more, Otis, when your mom tells you what not to do—You can get some swell ideas, that way!"

ADVERTISEMENT

Listen! with Glynn

By John Charles Daly, substituting for Paul Glynn, who is on vacation.

I guess over the last three and one half years, CBS has sent me rambling 150,000 miles of the highways and byways of these United States, but until two weeks ago, I had never set foot in Louisiana; nor had I consummated my dearest wish—to see the French Quarter in New Orleans.

Columbia has taken care of this matter.

I spent 18 days in what may be safely called a losing battle with the chiggers, mosquitoes, snakes and general wetness of the famed Bayou country. As if these natural obstacles were not enough, the Second and Third Armies of the United States of America, in the process of fighting their own battles, managed to gas me thoroughly with an acrid white smoke used to simulate gas.

I have studied exhaustively the educational system of New Orleans. Every time we moved with an army, radio was assigned to a schoolhouse. Every studio assigned me was in a grade school and I had to arrange my six feet as decorously as I could around, over and in a 4-year-old's desk. That I may not be thought unkind, I must say New Orleans is a wonderful city, and it's food superb.

Contract Bridge

This question concerns the play of today's hand at rubber bridge. The contract is three no trump; you are sitting South as declarer. West opens the spade six which East wins with the ace. A spade is returned and your jack holds; how do you continue from this point?

Today's Hand

East West Vulnerable

♣ J 9 2

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: 6♠.

A good rubber-bridge player prefers safety to over-tricks and declarer makes his contract by planning to take nine tricks and refusing the club finesse. When his spade jack wins he can count eight tricks, three diamonds, three hearts, a spade and the club ace. If the club finesse holds he may make six-odd but he sees that it is not needed for game if the diamonds break 3-3.

South rightly holds the club finesse in reserve and first takes three rounds of diamonds. When both opponents follow three times, the game-going tricks are found in the established low diamond. After cashing his three high hearts, the leads the club jack from his hand and puts on dummy's ace when West follows with a low club, to make game.

If declarer had taken the club finesse, he would have been defeated, losing the club king and four spades.
